Introduction

This project is the outcome of research conducted for my doctoral thesis that examines the history of Caribbean and Caribbean diaspora publishing in Britain, with the British Library and University College London. Whilst this research started during my studies, it is thanks to a placement with the Eccles Centre in 2020/ 2021 that I was able to continue working on this bibliography to include a subject index. ‘Caribbean Publishing: a selective bibliography of British Library holdings, 1800-1974’ is part of my broader mission to demonstrate longstanding traditions of printed knowledge production in the Caribbean region. The focus on publishers and subject rather than authors, reflects my interest in the creation of the book as a vessel for producing knowledge about history, cultures, politics, the nation and the self. While this project began in-person, with catalogue searches of Caribbean territories, cities and towns, leading to me order up and look through hundreds of books, the pandemic turned the latter part into a digital endeavour until reading rooms re-opened.

This bibliography includes British Library holdings of books that were published in Barbados, British Guiana, Grenada, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago, between 1800 and their respective independences: 1966, 1970, 1974, 1962 and 1962. A selective bibliography, there were some important exclusions, crucially, anything that was published by a ‘government printing office.’ However, certain publishers, such as the Argosy Press in British Guiana and The Gleaner in Jamaica, often had government printing contracts, so they have not been fully omitted. The exclusion of these texts was part of a conscious effort to focus on books that were published outside of the colonial state’s direct control. The process of producing this bibliography has given insight into the contours of the Caribbean publishing landscape during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The first Eccles Centre study guide dedicated to Caribbean publishing, the inclusion of a subject index has furthered knowledge of Caribbean historiographical, literary and print trends. As it reveals, history texts, which were the most popular genre, accounted for a quarter of all books published between 1800 and 1974. Likewise, another quarter were literary (poetry, fiction, memoir, folktales and plays). It is significant that half of the publications in this bibliography were historical or literary – it speaks to political and social shifts, encompassing a rapidly growing emphasis on self-discovery and nation-building over this period.

Like any research guide, this bibliography has its limitations. As a legal deposit library, publishers across the British Empire were compelled, by law, to send copies of all published works to the Royal Library. So, technically the British Library should hold a copy of everything that was published in the Caribbean before independence. Unsurprisingly, this is not the case. There are several issues concerning collecting and archiving: ephemeral publications – which likely included radical, unofficial and DIY pamphlets – would have escaped legal deposit, thus, never becoming part of the collection. Even once items arrive safely, they are vulnerable to loss, damage and destruction. For example, many of the cookbooks listed here are marked as destroyed by World War 2 bombing. To reiterate, this is a selective bibliography that uses a colonial archive as a window on publishing in the colonial period. It is not immune to the ‘big island’ dominance that presents a perpetual problem when researching the Caribbean; over half of the entries (296 out of 532) were published in Jamaica, followed by Trinidad and Tobago with 99, British Guiana with 78, Barbados with 42 and Grenada with 17.

Another issue that arose were sparse, incorrect and outdated catalogue records, particularly in relation to subject headings, dates and publishers. In order to mitigate against this, I explored global library catalogues and checked hundreds of books to ascertain missing information where possible. Although many subject headings were guided by catalogue records, I had to categorise hundreds of books myself, which leads to potential issues of subjectivity. However, all records are subjective!

This bibliography has been alphabetically ordered by territory and then publisher. Within each publisher heading works have been ordered by date. Users can see a full list of publishers in the contents page below, followed by the full listing of works, the subject index and lastly, an index of collection items that were digitised at the time of creation between 2020 and 2022, so more items may well have been digitised since (digitised items are also marked with [DG] in the listing of works). When searching for shelf marks, please search without the brackets that have been used to demarcate them in this bibliography. The subject index includes ten core subjects, with most having several sub-subjects e.g. 'Literature' includes poetry, fiction and short stories, etc. Please note that this is an inter-subject index, many books came under multiple categories, which is noted with an asterisk*.

Finally, I want to thank Philip Abraham, Jean Petrovic, Cara Rodway and Polly Russell for supporting this research and facilitating the most wonderful and intellectually invigorating placement with the Eccles Centre. In particular to this project, thank you Jean for your superb advice on all things bibliography-related. Thanks also to Elizabeth Cooper and Kate Quinn for encouraging my interest in Caribbean publishing throughout the PhD process. The placement with the Eccles Centre was supported by funding from the Arts and Humanities Council.
