United Kingdom parliamentary publications: parliamentary papers

INTRODUCTION AND TERMINOLOGY

Parliamentary publications were historically organised in two groups, each in three series for each House. The first group consisted of the information papers required by Parliament in its work of legislation and of monitoring the work of the government. These papers were known as the Parliamentary Papers, Sessional Papers or, as gathered together in their official sequence and bound, as the 'Bound Set'. The three series of parliamentary papers were 'Bills' and 'Papers' of which each House had their own series and 'Command Papers' which were common to both Houses. The second group consisted of the proceedings of Parliament. The three series of proceedings were the Journals of each House, the Debates of each House, commonly called 'Hansard' and the daily business papers called 'The Vote Bundle' for the House of Commons and 'Minutes of Proceedings' for the House of Lords.

The pattern of parliamentary publishing changed radically between 2010 and March 31st 2016 as it transitioned from print to electronic. At that date the last contracts with TSO for print publication ceased and the British Library ceased to hold the material in hard copy.

This guide will tell you about the Library's historic print collections and subscribed electronic resources, how to access these, and what is available free on the Internet. It will also describe the new arrangements for taking in the Commons and Lords papers electronically under non-print legal deposit from the 2016/17 session and will tell you how to find and access them.

1. PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS

The House of Commons' parliamentary papers are issued in a numbered series of Bills and Papers which were gathered together and bound in sessional volumes from 1801 to May 2016. Indexes date from 1807. Command Papers formed a separate series within the sessional papers from 1833-2015/16. Until session 1978-79 the prescribed sequence for binding the sessional volumes was in subject order in four groups: 'Public Bills', 'Reports of Committees' (i.e. Select Committees of the House), 'Reports of Commissioners' (i.e. all other committees, etc. of enquiry), and 'Accounts and Papers' (all other papers not comprised in the first three categories). Indexes are therefore essential to finding any particular paper in the print run.

From 1979-80-2015/16 the arrangement was simplified and Bills, House of Commons Papers and Command Papers are arranged in their numerical sequences within the sessional volumes. The British Library had anticipated this new arrangement three years earlier and our set has therefore been bound numerically from 1976-77.

The bound volumes 1801-2015/16 are kept in basement storage on site at St Pancras at shelf mark BS.Ref.1 and have to be ordered using the Direct Request facility on the Automated Book Request System. They can only be delivered to the social sciences reading room and cannot be consulted elsewhere.

The House of Lords also produces Bills and Papers, and Command Papers are presented to them as well. However, as the same Command Papers are presented to each House, in practice they are not included in the Lords' set. Like the Commons, Lords' sessional papers have been gathered together in a Bound Set from the start of the nineteenth century to the end of the 2015/16 session. They are also kept in basement storage at St Pancras at shelfmark BS.96/1 and are ordered using the Automated Book Request System (ABRS). They can only be consulted in the social sciences reading room and cannot be delivered elsewhere.

From 2010 Parliament started to reduce production of its papers in print and to move towards electronic only publication. This move was completed for practical purposes by the end of the 2015/16 session when the remaining contracts with TSO expired. The Library maintained a complete set of papers in print to that point.

The move of additional written evidence presented to Commons select committees to electronic only publication in phases from October 2010 is especially complex. To February 2014 it was collated and published as a pdf alongside the main report. From February 2014 committees began to use e-portals for submission of all written evidence. Written evidence is no longer collated and published in pdf format, but can now be found on the web page of the specific inquiry, under the heading 'Written evidence'. However, to the end of session 2015/16 the Library purchased volumes of 'Written evidence' collated by a commercial publisher. These are filed in the Bound Set with the main reports to which they relate. Unlike the Commons, Lords committees continue to produce compilations of oral and written evidence which are published alongside their reports on the committee's publications page.

From the 2016/17 session the Library stopped collecting Commons and Lords papers and bills and Command papers in print and began receiving them electronically under the Legal Deposit Libraries (Non-Print Works) Regulations 2013. Catalogue records for individual documents are loaded into Explore the British Library [<http://explore.bl.uk/>] with hotlinks to the full text. However, due to the restrictions imposed by the Regulations, the documents can only be delivered to personal users on-site; they cannot be viewed remotely. You can find more information about non-print legal deposit in general on our website [<http://www.bl.uk/aboutus/legaldeposit/>].

2. PUBLIC BILLS

Bills are draft acts of parliament and are numbered consecutively within parliamentary sessions. As bills progress through Parliament, they may well be amended and, if so, are normally reprinted as amended and are given a fresh bill number. Proposed amendments to bills proceeding through the House of Commons were traditionally issued in the 'Vote Bundle' (see Daily Business Papers for further details) and are currently found on the bill's home page on the Parliament website [<http://www.parliament.uk/business/bills-and-legislation/>].

The Government also publishes a number of Bills each session in draft form to enable consultation before a Bill is issued formally. These drafts are normally issued as Command Papers (see below).

Unlike the House of Commons, the House of Lords issues amendments to its public bills within its bill series. The amendments carry the same bill numbers as the original bill but with lower-case letter or roman numeral suffixes.

Private bills are printed at the promoters' expense and are not parliamentary or even official publications. However, unlike public bills, publication has been compulsory since 1703. The British Library has extensive holdings thanks to its possession of the Harper Collection, the private papers of an eighteenth century parliamentary agent.

From session 2007/08 bill histories together with all versions, lists of amendments, briefing papers, explanatory notes and links to debates in the Chambers and in Committees are very conveniently consolidated for all bills on the Parliament website. Consult the alphabetical list of bills for current and earlier sessions [<http://www.parliament.uk/business/bills-and-legislation/>].

The Library maintained its print collection of bills until the end of the 2015/16 session. Bills 1801-2015/16 are kept in basement storage on site at St Pancras at shelf mark BS.Ref.1 with the Bound Set of Commons papers and have to be ordered using the Direct Request facility on the Automated Book Request System. They can only be delivered to the social sciences reading room and cannot be consulted elsewhere.

From 2016/17 it began receiving them electronically under the Legal Deposit Libraries (Non-Print Works) Regulations 2013. Catalogue records for individual documents are loaded into Explore the British Library [<http://explore.bl.uk/>] with hotlinks to the full text, which can be delivered to on-site users only.

3. HOUSE OF COMMONS PAPERS

These consist of papers produced within the House, particularly reports of Select Committees of the House and certain papers originating outside Parliament. These include papers required by acts of parliament to be submitted to Parliament ('Act Papers'), such as the annual reports of some public bodies, and papers submitted to the House of Commons in response to requests from it for information ('Returns'). The different categories of papers are not formally distinguished and are numbered in a single sequence which starts new each session.

House of Commons Select Committees are largely concerned with examining the work of government departments. They ceased print production of their reports at the end of the 2015/16 session and these are now published online only on the Parliament website. Each committee has its own home page where its reports from 1997/98 onwards are found. To find the home page, consult the alphabetical list of committees [<http://www.parliament.uk/business/committees/committees-a-z/commons-select/>]

From February 2014, the official versions of Act papers and Returns ceased to be produced in print and are published online [https://www.gov.uk/government/publications?official_document_status=command_and_act_papers]. However, commercial publishers are free to produce print copies of papers for sale.

In order to maintain the integrity of the bound set in this difficult transitional phase, the British Library continued to receive print copies of Act papers, Returns and committee reports until the end of the 2015/16 session. The Bound Set of Commons papers 1801-2015/16 are kept in basement storage on site at St Pancras at shelf mark BS.Ref.1 and have to be ordered using the Direct Request facility on the Automated Book Request System. They can only be delivered to the social sciences reading room and cannot be consulted elsewhere.

From the 2016/17 session the Library stopped collecting Commons papers in print and began receiving them electronically under the Legal Deposit Libraries (Non-Print Works) Regulations 2013. Catalogue records for individual documents are loaded into Explore the British Library [<http://explore.bl.uk/>] with hotlinks to the full text, which can be delivered to on-site users only.

4. COMMAND PAPERS

Like Returns, Command Papers originate outside Parliament but they are submitted to parliament by the wish of the government. As a separate series, they date from 1833. Before 1833 they were numbered as House papers. Numbering continues successively through parliamentary sessions. The first series omitted the command paper number from the papers and in citations the numbers are given in square brackets, []. A new series began in 1870. It is prefixed 'C'. Since then a further series has begun when the previous series approached 10.000 in number. The following prefixes have been used successively: Cd, Cmd, Cmnd and currently Cm. They are called "Command" papers as the formula printed on the title page is "Presented to Parliament ... by command of His/Her Majesty". They are presented to both Houses of Parliament but in practice are not included in the House of Lords' set of sessional papers and can only be found in that of the House of Commons. Two unofficial terms should be mentioned that are widely used though they have no formal definition. 'White Papers' are statements of government policy and are always issued as Command Papers. 'Green Papers' are consultation documents and may be issued as Command Papers, but more usually they are not parliamentary papers at all. They are mainly published directly by the departments and agencies themselves, often only in electronic form on the departmental or agency web site.

From February 2014, the official versions of Command papers ceased to be produced in print and are published online [https://www.gov.uk/government/publications?official_document_status=command_and_act_papers]. However, commercial publishers are free to produce print copies of papers for sale.

In order to maintain the integrity of the bound set in this difficult transitional phase, the British Library continued to receive print copies of Command papers to the end of the 2015/16 session. The Bound Set of Command papers 1801-2015/16 are kept in basement storage on site at St Pancras at shelf mark BS.Ref.1 and have to be ordered using the Direct Request facility on the Automated Book Request System. They can only be delivered to the social sciences reading room and cannot be consulted elsewhere.

From the 2016/17 session the Library stopped collecting Command papers in print and began receiving them electronically under the Legal Deposit Libraries (Non-Print Works) Regulations 2013. Catalogue records for individual documents are loaded into Explore the British Library [<http://explore.bl.uk/>] with hotlinks to the full text, which can be delivered to on-site users only.

5. GENERAL PRINTED INDEXES

The House of Commons Sessional Papers have their own subject indexes which constitute the final paper of the session. During the first half of the nineteenth century various cumulations of these sessional indexes were produced, culminating in a three volume index covering 1801-1852. The first volume covers bills, the second select committees and the third (bound as two volumes in the Library's set) everything else. The next multi-sessional index covered 1852/53 to 1869, after which intermediate cumulations covered decades. Final cumulations exist for 1852-1899 and 1900-1949, each in a single volume. The 1852-1899 index, though adequate for retrieving papers from the Bound Set, lacks numbers. After the 1900-1949 index there are decennial indexes up to 1969/70 to 1978/79, published as recently as 1995. After that there are only sessional indexes.

6. SPECIAL PRINTED INDEXES

Apart from the official sessional indexes and their cumulations, there are numerous other indexes, some alternative general indexes, others specialised indexes on particular topics. The principal alternative general index was produced in five printed volumes by Chadwyck-Healey to accompany their microfiche edition of the parliamentary papers. It is a systematic index with an alphabetical subject index at the back of volume five. It covers 1801-1900. Another general, yet in this instance selective, index has also been produced in connexion with a reprint edition. The index to the Irish Universities Press (IUP) 1000-volume reprint of nineteenth-century papers also contains a checklist in session/volume/paper number order. Specialised indexes on the open shelves include an index to Charity Commission Reports, indexes to Consular and Commercial Reports (a mixture of printed, typescript and card indexes), a card index of Colonial Annual Reports, and a numerical list of Command Papers.

7. PRINTED AND MICROFORM REPRINTS

Before the nineteenth century no attempt was made to gather sets of parliamentary papers together and there is no eighteenth century equivalent of the 'Bound Set'. Early in the nineteenth century some attempt was made to rectify this. A set of reports was printed in 15 large folio volumes, known as 'The First Series' and covering the period 1715-1801. Further series followed but they duplicate the Bound Set and can therefore be ignored. Also, from papers still in store, seven sets of eighteenth century papers were put together in 111 volumes on the orders of Speaker Abbot. These volumes are known as 'The Abbot Collection' and cover the period 1715-1800. The sets contain papers of all sorts and not just reports of select committees. No two sets are identical or absolutely complete. Access to 'The First Series' and 'The Abbot Collection' here at the Library is restricted but a modern facsimile reprint containing both is available in the Reading Room at shelf mark BS.Ref.19. House of Commons Sessional Papers of the Eighteenth Century was edited by Sheila Lambert and is popularly known as the Lambert reprint. It not only makes available papers in both collections in 145 vols. plus two volumes of indexes, but also has several other advantages. Sheila Lambert collated all seven versions of the Abbot Collection and her reprint contains papers found in any of them. It is therefore more detailed than the Library's own original set. It also includes a quantity of papers not previously collected. Although it does not reprint papers first printed in the House of Commons' Journals (a practice common in the eighteenth century), it does index them. It also indexes papers for which orders to print have been found in the Journals, but of which no existing copies have been traced. This may indicate that the order to print was not carried out or that no copies are known to have survived.

Nineteenth century papers were selectively reprinted in the 1960s by the Irish University Press in its "1000 volume set". Papers reprinted in this set are individually recorded in the Integrated Catalogue and can be requested from the off-site store where they are held using the Automated Book Request System (ABRS) in the normal way. However, must be consulted in the social sciences reading room and cannot be delivered elsewhere.

The Chadwyck-Healey microfiche edition of the House of Commons papers from 1801 to session 2004/05 is available in the Reading Room at shelf mark SPR.Mic.E.291. To avoid damage to the Bound Set, copies of individual papers must be made from the microfiche. Another set complete from session 2002/03 onwards is held in a St Pancras basement at shelf marks SPR.Mic.E.892 (bills), SPR.Mic.E.893 (papers) and SPR.Mic.E.894 (Command papers).

A microfilm set containing the Harper collection of mainly private bills and related petitions, 1694-1760 is kept at SPR.Mic.A.163. A complete list of contents is in the Harper Collection at OPL Index and a chronological index of titles appears in appendix 1 of Sheila Lambert's Bills and acts at OPL 328.420737.

You can request documents from these sets using paper tickets available at the enquiry desk; they cannot be ordered using ABRS and must be consulted in the social sciences reading room.

8. HOUSE OF LORDS PAPERS AND BILLS

Like the Commons, Lords' sessional papers and bills have been gathered together in a Bound Set from the start of the nineteenth century to the end of the 2015/16 session. There is also a facsimile reprint of eighteenth century papers edited by F.W. Torrington. Additionally there are cumulative General Indexes but only three exist, covering 1801-59, 1859-70 and 1871-85. There is a further complication with the Lords' indexes. Because of delays in the House of Lords' Library in arranging their set for binding, the British Museum Library bound its set differently. Where they exist, the indexes can identify House of Lords' papers, but they cannot locate them in the Library's collections. To locate them make a note of the session and paper number from the indexes (until 1986-87 House of Lords bills and papers were in a single numerical sequence each session) and then consult the crib volumes next to the indexes. These are two oblong volumes with squared paper printed on the right-hand page with numbers printed in the squares. These represent the paper numbers and each page represents a session up to 1951-52. The corresponding volumes in the British Library's set are hand-written in the appropriate squares. In some instances the Lords' papers lack numbers. In this case the titles of the papers and the volume number are given on the back of the page. After 1885 only sessional indexes exist, which are kept in storage.

For the period from 1953-80 photocopies of the sessional tables of contents are with the indexes at the 'Quick Reference' shelves [OPL Index]. In the nineteenth century it was not uncommon for papers of one House to be communicated to the other so that many House of Lords' papers have also been published as House of Commons' papers. As it is so difficult to find papers in the Lords' set, it is always worth checking the indexes of the House of Commons' set first. This does not apply to bills which are printed documents unique to each House though the text will be the same if no amendments have been made.

Lords papers 1801-2015/16 are kept in basement storage on site at St Pancras at shelf mark BS.96/1 and have to be ordered using the Direct Request facility on the Automated Book Request System (ABRS). They can only be delivered to the social sciences reading room and cannot be consulted elsewhere.

Happily the historic Lords papers have been digitised. We strongly recommend that you use either Public Information Online (covers 1901-) or the UK Parliamentary Papers (covers 1800-1910) databases if possible instead of the printed set. Lords committee reports from 1997/98 are on the UK Parliament website

9 CITATION

To identify and to be able to retrieve parliamentary papers, a standard form of citation has evolved. Each citation begins with a short yet unambiguous title of the paper followed by a semi-colon and then 'P.P.' for parliamentary papers. After that the parliamentary session is given in date form. If a session was wholly contained in a single calendar year, then that defines the session (e.g. '1974'). If a session spans two years the date span defines the session as in '1973-74' or '1974-75'. Occasionally two short sessions fell within one year and are identified as e.g. '1841 Sess.1' and '1841 Sess.2'. In one single instance a session spanned three years (1914-16). After the date follows the paper number. House of Commons' Bills are given in the form 'Bill' plus the number whereas House of Commons' Papers are given in the form of the paper number alone in parentheses (). House of Lords' Papers and Bills, when numbered in one series, are given in the form "HL" plus the number. After separate numbering was introduced for the two series, they are given as 'HL Bill" and "HL Paper" plus the number. The first series of Command Papers without prefix, are given as the number within square brackets []. For subsequent series which have a prefix (C, Cd, Cmd, Cmnd or Cm), the prefix must be given plus number. With the prefixes the brackets are unnecessary but are still often used. Similarly parentheses are unnecessary for House of Commons' Bills or any Lords' papers but they are often used. Next comes the volume number in the Bound Set of sessional papers in the form of lower-case roman numerals (e.g. Vol. 23 is given as 'xxiii'). There are two sets of volume numbers for the House of Commons' Bound Set, the volume number of the session as a whole and the volume numbers of the sub-series (Bills, Report of Committees, etc.) within it. Only the former should ever be used in citations. Finally give the page number within the volume where the paper starts. Again there are two sets of page numbers for the Bound Set, the original printed page numbers of the individual papers and the hand-written or stamped page numbers of the made-up volume. Only the latter should be used in citation. From 1979-80 onwards, papers in the Bound Set are arranged in their three numbered series Bills, House of Commons Papers and Command Papers (two series for Lords) in numerical order. Here volume and page number are no longer needed when citing as session and paper numbers are sufficient.

This system clearly identifies the individual parliamentary papers and is adequate to retrieve them from any library's collection whether or not they are arranged in the sequence of the official Bound Set. However sometimes it is necessary to refer to a section within a parliamentary paper. In this case the printed page number of the reference (this time the printed page number) should be included before the semi-colon and everything after the semi-colon should be as above (i.e. the final page number should still be the manuscript page number of the start paper and not the page number of the reference).

Some examples of citations to different types of parliamentary papers:

- Food and drugs bill; P.P. 1955-56 Bill 47 ii 355.
- 1841 population census (GB): P.P. 1841 sess. 2 (52) ii 227.
- Rept., Sel. Cttee on bastardy orders ; P.P. 1909 (236) v 717
- Rept., R. Comm'n on the Press 1947-49; P.P. 1948-49 Cmd 7700 xx I.
- Osteopaths bill as amended in Cttee; P.P. 1991-92 HL Bill 75
- Rept. On Bor of Eye. In Rept. of Parl. Boundary Comm'n, Pt V, pp.27-28; P.P. 1831-32 (141-V) xl I.
- New Forest: return of enclosures; P.P. 1867 HL 329 xix 427.

Note that the last case is one of the frequent instances where the paper is also issued in the House of Commons set (in sess. 1867, vol. lix). In practice it would be that copy that would be used and cited.

10. FREE ELECTRONIC VERSIONS

From February 2014, the official versions of Command papers and House of Commons Act papers and Returns ceased to be produced in print and are published online [https://www.gov.uk/government/publications?official_document_status=command_and_act_papers]. Act papers are required by acts of parliament to be submitted to the House. These include the annual reports of some public bodies. Returns are papers submitted to the House of Commons in response to requests from it for information. However, commercial publishers are free to produce print copies of any of these papers for sale.

The papers are arranged in reverse chronological order with the most recent at the top of the list. The oldest paper is a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of electric lamps from 1951, but the listings for the earlier years are obviously incomplete. You can filter the list by topic, by department, or by publication type.

Full text of Commons and Lords Select Committee reports, bills and bill histories and ancillary publications such as Commons and Lords Library notes and research papers are available on the Parliament website [www.parliament.uk].

11. SUBSCRIBED ELECTRONIC VERSIONS

Public information online (PIO) offers subscription-based access to Commons bills, papers and Command papers. Commons papers are available from 1997 onwards, bills from 2006 and Command papers from 1956. Dandy Booksellers who produce PIO digitised all the 20th century Lords papers and bills and now offer a complete run from 1901 to the present day. Papers are listed by session and can be sorted numerically, in chronological/reverse chronological order, or alphabetically by author. You can also search all fields by keyword, or look for a specific title, ISBN or paper number and limit your search by date range. We subscribe to this resource and access is available in both the St Pancras and Boston Spa reading rooms, but not remotely.

Official publications online (OPO) is a subscription service from TSO (The Stationery Office) offering access to a collection of Lords and Commons papers and bills and Command papers complete from 2009. Selected papers from earlier sessions have been added. Access is available in both the St Pancras and Boston Spa reading rooms, but not remotely.

All of the House of Commons parliamentary papers from 1801 have been digitised by Proquest and are available online in full text to subscribers under the title UK Parliamentary papers. The nineteenth century papers are available through a Joint Infrastructure Committee (JISC) agreement to all UK higher and further education institutions. In late 2015 digitised Lords papers from 1800 to 1910 were added to Proquest's UK Parliamentary papers database. All series are fully cross-searchable. The collection sheds new light on edits and revisions made by the Lords to key bills during the legislative process. The House of Lords Parliamentary Papers fill in the gap in how legislation was authored, amended, and passed. They also reveal previously unknown material such as statistical data, oral evidence, and letters and business papers relating not only to Britain but also to the many parts of the world that were under British influence during the nineteenth century. The British Library has access from 1801 to the present from the Boston Spa and London reading rooms.

For the eighteenth century, a project led by the University of Southampton digitised the journals, a selection of pre-Hansard debates, sessional papers and public bills from the Lambert reprint, Lords papers from the Torrington reprint, and an extensive set of private bills from the British Library's collections. These have been incorporated with UK Parliamentary Papers and are offered on the same Proquest platform. The British Library has access from 1801 to the present from the Boston Spa and London reading rooms.
