INTRODUCTION

Germany unconditionally surrendered to the allies at midnight on May 8th/9th 1945. With this unconditional surrender the German state ceased to exist, and responsibility for government was assumed by the four occupying powers, The United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and France. Each power occupied a specific zone of Germany; Berlin, although situated in the Soviet Zone was to be governed by an inter-allied authority.

At first the Allies attempted to forge a common policy for the government of Germany through the Allied Control Council. However, this proved abortive due to the divergent interests of the powers, and meetings of the Control Council were characterized by deadlock. Increasingly the British and US authorities acted on their own initiative to resolve problems in their own zones of occupation. In 1946 the British accepted an American proposal that their two zones should be merged for economic purposes, and the bizone came into existence on 1st January 1947. By that date much administrative responsibility had already been handed over to the Germans, and state governments had been set up. State Parliaments (Landtage) were elected in the US zone (June 1946), the British Zone (April 1947) and the French Zone (May 1947).

In January 1948 the powers and composition of the German Economic Council for the Anglo-American bizone were changed to create the nucleus of a future German Government. The Council itself was expanded to 104 members and a second chamber, the Länderrat, consisting of two representatives of each state, was set up. In June, a plan of development that would include the French Zone was agreed upon. It provided for a federal German government of all three zones and the summoning of a Constituent Assembly.

The Soviet Government took exception to these developments and took retaliatory action in the shape of a blockade of West Berlin, intending to drive out the Western powers. These powers counter-blockaded the Soviet zone and organised an airlift to keep West Berlin supplied. The Soviet Union finally lifted the blockade in May 1949. Finally a tacit working agreement was reached which left Berlin divided into Western and Eastern sectors under separate administrations.

Meanwhile, plans went ahead to set up a German government in the Western zones. A Parliamentary Council of 65 members elected by the Landtage met at Bonn on September 1st 1948 to draft a constitution. In April 1949 the United States, British and French foreign ministers published a new occupation statute governing their respective zones. This guaranteed full powers of self-government to the new West German State, except for certain reserved subjects such as the question of Berlin. The Basic Law of the new state was passed by the Parliamentary Council on May 8th 1949, and four days later was approved by the Western Allied military governors. When the Occupation
Statute came into force in September, the Allied military government was replaced by an Allied High Commission. The first federal election was held on August 14th 1949.

The University of Wisconsin Digital Library includes a collection of full text documents entitled Germany under Reconstruction [http://digicoll.library.wisc.edu/History/subcollections/GerReconAbout.shtml] dating from the period immediately following World War II. Many are publications of the U.S. occupying forces, including reports and descriptions of efforts to introduce U.S.-style democracy to Germany. Some of the other books and documents describe conditions in a country devastated by years of war, efforts at political, economic and cultural development, and the differing perspectives coming from the U.S. and British zones and the Russian zone of occupation.
