INTRODUCTION

The British Library's collection

The British Library has a unique collection of printed British electoral registers (their formal name is 'Registers of Electors') from 1832 to date. This collection occupies some 2.25 miles (ca 3.62 km) of shelves. If the collection continues to grow at the current rate (c. 41-42m per year) by 2024 they will be spread over more than 4 km.

Under the Representation of the people (England and Wales) (Amendment) Regulations 2002 and 2006 (SI 2002 No. 1871 and SI 2006 No. 752), Representation of the people (Scotland) (Amendment) Regulations 2002 and 2006 (SI 2002 No. 1872 and SI 2006 No. 834), Representation of the people (Northern Ireland) (Amendment) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002 No.1873), Representation of the People (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2008 (SI 2008 No. 1741) and under earlier legislation going back to 1947, the Library has received for over 67 years and retains a complete set of printed registers for the whole of the United Kingdom (England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland). This applies to no other institution. The National Libraries of Scotland and Wales like the British Library both have a patchy collection prior to 1946 but only for their respective countries. Their collections are then more or less complete from then on but again for their own countries only. Under the current legislation there are a limited number of other deposited sets.

Since 2006 the British Library has been entitled to receive both print and data copies of registers from England, Scotland and Wales. Current legislation covering the registers for Northern Ireland does not contain an entitlement for the British Library to obtain a copy in data format.

The National Library of Wales although acquiring both print and data copies for Wales is not able to make the data copy available for access at the current time. The situation in Scotland is different as some registers for Scotland continue to be supplied and made available in print whereas others are provided in data form. There is no access to these data copies at the National Library of Scotland. The collection at the National Library of Scotland is therefore less complete after 2006 than it was between 1946 and 2006. If you are planning to visit either of these libraries to look at a specific register it is strongly recommended that you first contact the relevant library in advance of your visit.

It might be thought that, as published works, copies of electoral registers should have been deposited under the Copyright Act 1911 (1&2 Geo.5, cap.46) not only with the British Library but with the other legal deposit or copyright libraries - the Bodleian Library, Oxford University, Cambridge University Library, the National Libraries of Scotland and Wales, and Trinity College, Dublin - but this has not happened. Firstly, there was doubt as to the legal status of registers; whether or not they were truly 'published' within the meaning of the Act. True, current and earlier legislation refers to the registers having to be published but this in the context means only that they must be made available for inspection by the public at council offices and, usually, public libraries during normal opening hours. For the British Museum Library (the predecessor of the British Library) and, by implication for the other copyright libraries, the doubt was resolved by the Regulations dated October 12, 1932 made by the British Museum under the British Museum Act 1932 as to publications not required, belatedly published in 1935 as SR&O 1935 No.278. This set out a list of publications excluded from the requirement of legal deposit and, among excluded ephemera like calendars and local railway timetables, were electoral registers. Much of the material formally excluded by these regulations had, in practice, never been deposited or claimed and, for electoral registers, deposit at the British Museum had been patchy at best. As for the other copyright libraries, their entitlement to British publications was not automatic as with the British Museum or British Library but only 'on demand' and, in practice, they have never demanded electoral registers, the National Libraries of Scotland and Wales being partial exceptions as noted above.

The British Library, therefore, has the only comprehensive nationwide collection of non-current electoral registers received since 1947 under electoral legislation, initially the Electoral registration regulations 1947 (SR&O 1947 No.1646), rather than copyright legislation. It also has earlier registers which, though far from complete, are nevertheless extensive, some 25,000 registers in total. The story of their acquisition is curious. In 1832, when registration began, a handful of registers were received by the British Museum and these were duly catalogued and added to the general stock of the library; and their records can still be found in the General catalogue of printed books and its online successor, Explore the British Library. The authorities that supplied these few registers generally did not continue so to do and the 1832 registers that the Library holds are usually the only ones for the constituencies concerned. Over the next few decades a handful more of isolated registers were supplied; others have been acquired by purchase or donation. These too were catalogued and added to the general stock of the Library. Together they number a few dozen out of potentially several thousand electoral registers. It would seem that, at this time, registers were seldom deposited and never claimed by the British Museum. This changed in the autumn of 1863 when, it is clear, a concerted effort was made to rectify the matter and a circular was obviously dispatched to the appropriate authorities requesting not only copies of the then current registers but also back runs of earlier ones. The evidence for this is that all registers prior to 1864 in the electoral register collection (i.e. excluding the few in the general collection) bear a receipt stamp dated '1864' (some dated quite early in the year which suggests the chasing began late in the previous year) and, for any given constituency, the stamped date is all the same. A few registers then supplied go back unbroken to 1832 but most are less complete and a few bear a pasted-in letter apologising for the gaps in the holdings.

This exercise was not repeated and the circular may well have been unclear about the ongoing supply of future registers. The Library has continuing registers for some of the constituencies but others stop in 1864 or soon afterwards. Inevitably a few more peter out after a number of years as staff changes caused a break in continuity. The next landmark is 1885 when there is a sharp increase in the number of registers held for 1885/86 compared to previous years. The reason for this is unclear; it may have been as a result of a further circular from the British Museum or, perhaps, from the Home Office. Whatever the reason, the result is unmistakable. This time no back runs were supplied and in a few cases no further registers either. The only nineteenth century Irish registers held are for this year alone (a quarter of all the Irish registers for that year but only a fraction of 1 % of all pre-partition Irish registers - see Appendix 2). Elsewhere there are a few more constituencies for which only the 1885/86 registers are held but mostly the runs continue with few, if any, breaks until 1915 after which the compilation of registers was suspended for the remaining duration of the First World War.

When deposit resumed in the autumn of 1918 the Library's holdings had marginally deteriorated but, for those constituencies supplying their registers, complete runs are held from then or soon after until 1931 inclusive, after which receipt of all registers (except for a few Scottish constituencies) abruptly ceased, obviously due to the operation of the British Museum regulations referred to above. Equally abruptly receipt was resumed in 1937 and for the first time the library's holdings are complete for that year for the whole country and almost complete for the following year. The reason for the resumption of the deposit of the registers for 1937 and its unprecedented completeness is a mystery, as is its cessation after only one more year until 1947. As a consequence of the Second World War no registers were published from 1940 to 1944 inclusive but there were registers for 1939, 1945 and 1946 (two each in the latter two years). However none is held by the British Library except for the same few Scottish constituencies that continued to supply registers in the mid-1930s and, in the case of the immediate post-War registers, some Northern Irish constituencies as well. From and including 1947 deposit of electoral registers is for the first time on an unambiguously statutory basis and holdings are complete.

The Library's holdings of electoral registers, apart from the handful received before 1864 or acquired by Early Printed Collections by purchase or donation, have been kept as a separate collection. The early arrangement is unknown but between the wars a pressmark system was devised with a 'V.R.' prefix (for 'voter's registers') followed by a number which had the effect of arranging the registers by county. This system was abandoned some time before 1971, perhaps as unsuited to expansion with ever more new and changed constituencies at successive redistributions, and a new system was adopted which still continues and the old 'V.R.' registers were re-pressmarked. The new system has a 'BL' prefix (of no known mnemonic significance - it predates the formation of the British Library) followed by a third letter for English constituencies indicating the county or borough. In Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, the third letter indicates the country followed by a fourth for the county or borough. In all cases this is followed by a number for the individual constituency. Gaps were left in the numeration to interpolate new constituencies but from the 1984 and 1995 redistributions the majority of constituencies were renumbered starting the numeration where the previous registers left off. This means that same-named constituencies (sometimes even with unchanged boundaries) will have different pressmarks after successive redistributions but the system does greatly ease the shelving arrangements of registers and facilitated the separation of the older ones and their storage off site. This renumbering was repeated in 2010 for constituencies in England and is likely to be repeated each time there is a boundary change. There are two exceptions. In Northern Ireland following the 2010 redistribution, constituency boundaries were changed, but no new constituencies were created and no names were altered. The “new” constituencies remain at their pre-2010 pressmarks. In Wales, following the 2007 redistribution, three new constituencies were created and three others disappeared. Changes to the remaining 37 constituencies were minor, and these remain at their pre-2007 pressmarks.

Until the move of the British Library to its present location, limitations of storage space had meant that electoral registers had long been stored off site except for the most recent year which was available in the Official Publications Reading Room at Bloomsbury. Early in the twentieth century the electoral register collection had been out-housed at ‘Hendon,’ that is at the Newspaper Library depository at Colindale and later in the Library’s stores on the Woolwich Arsenal site. In the early planning for the move to the Library’s new building on the Euston Road it was hoped to house the electoral registers entirely on site there. Subsequent limitations to the original plans for the new library and, in particular, its storage capacity meant that this proved impossible but, as a compromise, the collection was split chronologically. All the registers up to and including 1997 are held off site in Yorkshire where they are housed in a high density store with robotic retrieval.

Since 2006, under SI 2006/752 for England and Wales and SI 2006 No. 834 for Scotland data copies of the electoral registers for England, Wales and Scotland have been deposited at the British Library. These arrive in a range of incompatible formats on CD-ROM or as email attachments and are not currently available for research. The Library is currently exploring options for normalizing the files and merging them to form a searchable database available to readers on site. If the project comes to fruition, searching would be by address only until the registers were over 10 years old. Under current legislation, name searching cannot be enabled until 10 years after publication.

Leading family history website Findmypast and the British Library have worked in partnership to digitise the Library’s collection of historic registers covering the period 1832-1932. Access to this dataset containing an estimated 220m voter records is available free in the Library’s reading rooms; otherwise full access is open to subscribers only.

Other sources

Although the comprehensiveness of the British Library’s holdings cannot be matched, it is not suggested that there are no alternative sources. Indeed, for current registers, an alternative source is essential as the British Library’s printed set is for the most part unavailable during its year of currency. This is due to the complex process of sorting and the time-consuming process of binding. Electoral registers are produced for parliamentary constituencies but are produced by local authorities. Originally the congruence between constituencies (whole boroughs and counties) and local authorities was complete but, with the division first of counties and then of boroughs and the creation of parliamentary boroughs which did not correspond to any municipal borough, this began to diminish and since 1948, with a conscious effort to produce equal-electorate constituencies as near as possible, it dwindled further still. By 1983 less than 10% of constituencies (59 out of 650) had boundaries that matched exactly those of local government units. Otherwise, either a local authority might contain two or more constituencies within its boundaries or a constituency might straddle two or more local authorities, sometimes both.

The basic 'building block' of registers is that for the polling district, some 35-40,000 of them in the country at large, an average of 55-60 to each constituency. What the Library receives from each relevant local authority is a batch of polling district registers. These are sorted into whole or part constituencies and, in the latter case combined with polling district registers from adjacent local authorities to form whole constituencies. The British Library binds its printed registers. Partly this is to preserve what is to be kept permanently and partly it is to ensure that registers do not get disordered should a reader wish to check addresses from the same polling district simultaneously over several years. Sorting and binding are combined, in fact, in a yearlong cycle; just as the final batch of registers for one year are returned from the binders, so the unsorted registers for the next year start to arrive.

Obviously with a cycle of this sort some registers are returned from the binders and are potentially available for use well before the year's end and as the cycle progresses more become available. Nevertheless for several months no current registers at all are available for consultation and it is only just as their currency is expiring that they are all available. The alternatives for printed registers are the appropriate electoral registration office or local public libraries for particular registers or electronic sources more generally. Public libraries have the advantage of ease of accessibility but, although formerly some libraries might be prepared to check registers over the phone, they are now prohibited by law from doing so. The most current registers may also be consulted by appointment at the local authority electoral registration office where they are kept. The most recent guidance from the Electoral Commission states that no public access should be given to older registers, although these are kept for as long as various statutory requirements suggest. Researchers requiring access to Welsh or Scottish registers may also use the collections of the National Libraries of Scotland and Wales.

In all cases there are legal restrictions on access to and use of the full as opposed to the edited (from 2014 open) version of the registers issued since December 2002 in whatever location they are consulted. The full version of the electoral register contains the names of all voters and its primary function is to support the democratic process. In order to comply with current legislation, they can only be consulted by users in person under supervision; copies can only be made by means of handwritten notes; and the content can only be used for personal research and study, not for commercial purposes. If data copies of the full version of the registers are made available to the public, the name search function has to be disabled. These restrictions are lifted once the register is over ten years old and the risk of invasion of privacy is lifted.

Researchers who need to search the registers by name to trace a living person should use one of the many commercial online people finding services available via the Internet such as 192.com (www.192.com) or TraceSmart (www.tracesmart.co.uk). A more comprehensive, although not exhaustive, list of the increasing number of electronic versions of the edited (from 2014 open) registers can be found in our Social Sciences Collection Guide UK Electoral Registers <http://bl.uk/collection-guides/uk-electoral-registers>. These normally include electronic versions of the edited/open electoral register alongside other resources such as telephone directories. The edited/open register has been produced since December 2002, is available for sale without restrictions on use and contains the names of voters who have signaled that they have no objection to their personal details being disseminated and used for commercial purposes by not exercising their right to appear in the full version of the register only. However it is worth noting that in 2013 44% of voters 'opted out' from the edited/open version of the electoral register.

For non-current registers covering the last sixty years or so no alternatives are absolutely necessary but on occasions a local source may be more convenient and for registers before 1947 the British Library's holdings may be deficient and alternative sources are not merely more convenient but may be essential. The alternative sources are essentially two. For major cities, the central reference library (usually the Local History Department) will often have a good run of registers for the city and sometimes for an area somewhat larger than that (Manchester is a good example of this). To a lesser extent smaller towns may also have good runs of their own registers but, outside the large cities, county record offices are the best alternative. Many have excellent, even complete, sets of registers for their own county though sometimes the scope is only 'county' constituencies and registers for borough seats within the county are absent. The London Metropolitan Archives (formally the Greater London Record Office) has registers for Greater London as defined at the time (the County of Middlesex, including the City of London, to 1889, Middlesex and the County of London 1890-1964 and the area of the former GLC since 1965). The electoral registers and poll books to 1965 in this collection have now been digitized and are available to subscribers to the commercial Ancestry service at www.Ancestry.co.uk. In Scotland and Wales, as already mentioned, their respective national libraries have a collection of registers for their own countries from shortly after the Second World War. Electoral registers since 1832 by Jeremy Gibson and Colin Rogers provides an excellent inventory of the holdings of electoral registers of Great Britain (not Ireland) in libraries and record offices. Jeremy Gibson has also produced a slightly revised version called Electoral registers 1832-1948 and Burgess rolls, published in 2008. Both largely omit the British library's holdings and so are complementary to this work (see the Bibliography).

Parliamentary representation

So much for the British Library's holdings of electoral registers and of alternative sources, but what exactly are electoral registers? Or, perhaps, one should ask first, why? They are connected with parliamentary representation and, although registers only date from the nineteenth century, representation has roots that go back to the thirteenth century. At that time in England the King's word was law but it still had to be promulgated. The most solemn laws, called 'statutes', were promulgated at meetings of the King's Great Council, thus associating his great vassals with the legislation. By the thirteenth century it became expedient to show that statutes had the support not just of the magnates but also of the lesser barons and the gentry and, in the towns, of the merchants as well. Clearly these could not all attend the King in person, rather a few were elected to represent the many on a geographical basis - two knights of the shire to represent each county and two burgesses for each borough; two each, presumably, on grounds of prudence in case something happened to one of them. The expanded Council soon became known as Parliament.

Representation of the shires was straightforward, although the palatinate counties of Chester and Durham were for long unrepresentative in Parliament. Chester (Cheshire) was first represented in 1553 and Co. Durham not until 1675. All English counties elected two MPs until Yorkshire was given four in 1822. Borough representation was more variable. What constituted a borough was not clear-cut and writs were initially issued for elections with respect to a wide variety of towns that did not remain parliamentary boroughs for long. By the fifteenth century borough representation was becoming more settled, though new boroughs continued occasionally to be created or ceased to be represented until the late seventeenth century (Durham City was enfranchised as late as 1678). Almost all English boroughs also elected two MPs, but five (including Monmouth, reckoned an English borough) elected only one. Two boroughs elected four MPs. Given the overwhelming size of London compared to any other English borough, it is hardly surprising that one of these was London. The other, Weymouth and Melcombe Regis needs more explanation. As the name implies, they were originally two separate boroughs, each electing two MPs. After a history of disputes between them, they were amalgamated for parliamentary purposes in 1571 and the new combined borough retained the same representation jointly that the two former boroughs had formerly done separately. Eight coastal boroughs in Kent and Sussex were reckoned as Cinque Port boroughs. This involved some differences in the issue of writs but otherwise made little difference. For university representation, see Appendix 4.

Although Wales was incorporated into England by the Statute of Wales 1284 (12 Edw.1 Stat. Wallie), it was another two-and-a-half centuries before it received parliamentary representation. This was effected by the Laws in Wales Act 1535 (27 Hen.8, cap.20), actually passed in 1536 and otherwise called the Union with Wales Act, which shired the Marcher Lordships of central and southern Wales (the Principality itself had been shired in 1284) and gave each of the 12 counties a single MP and, in principle, each county town one MP as a borough. Parliamentary representation was at that time a financial burden (which is why some early boroughs did not sustain the status) and could be insupportable for small or poor boroughs as were the Welsh shire-towns. To spread the financial load these were grouped with other towns in their counties which shared their franchise in what came to be called 'districts of boroughs'. Few systems are ever as simple as they appear and there were three variants to the Welsh county-town district-of-boroughs representation. Merioneth's shire-town, Harlech, was unrepresented either on its own or as the head-borough of a district. Brecon (or Brecknock) was represented on its own without a district; and Haverfordwest was declared a county of itself by the Laws in Wales Act, 1542 (34&35 Hen.8, cap.26) and was thereafter represented in a district of boroughs separate both from Pembrokeshire and from the Pembroke District of Boroughs. Monmouthshire, although enfranchised at the same time as the rest of Wales was reckoned as part of England (and so got two MPs); its status as part of England was declared definitively (until recently) by the Wales and Berwick Act, 1746 (20 Geo.2 cap.42).

Scottish representation at Westminster was determined by the treaty incorporated in the Acts of Union of both the English and Scottish parliaments. This provided for 45 Scottish MPs in as many single-member Scottish constituencies. Thirty of these were county seats and the 34 Scottish counties were accommodated by pairing six of the smallest of them so that each of a pair was represented in alternate parliaments. Orkney and Shetland were also paired but were conjoined as a single county for electoral purposes, perhaps as there were no electors in Shetland and the MP elected in each parliament was effectively the MP for Orkney. Fifteen seats were for the representation of Scottish burghs but far more burghs than this were represented in the former Scottish parliament. The solution was to group them into 'districts' as in Wales but for different reasons. Edinburgh elected an MP for itself but the remainder were grouped in 14 districts of burghs electing an MP each; these districts unlike those in Wales crossed county boundaries. Ireland had more generous representation. By its Act of Union neither the pairing of counties nor the grouping of boroughs proved necessary. In fact, all 32 counties continued to return two MPs to Westminster as they had done to the Irish parliament, as did Dublin City as a borough. The remaining boroughs and the university were reduced from two to one MP and, as no fresh elections were held in 1801, lots were drawn in constituencies with reduced representation to determine which of the two MPs would continue to represent it.

The Franchise

Apart from the disfranchisement of Grampound in 1821 and the transfer of the two extra seats to Yorkshire, this was the situation in 1832 when the Representation of the people Act 1832 (2&3 Gul.4 cap.45), RPA for short, otherwise known as the Great Reform Act, introduced electoral registers. Electorates were small by modern standards. The actual extension of the franchise in 1832 was quite modest, less than 300,000 on a base of half-a-million, and a more important factor in the need to introduce registers was the reduction in the time the polls were open. Traditionally this was for two weeks but had been reduced to eight days in boroughs in 1828 and was now reduced uniformly to two days (it was reduced to one day for boroughs in 1835 and for counties in 1853, except for Orkney and Shetland which retained a two-day poll until 1926). Up to 1832 there was no great difficulty in an elector presenting himself at the place of polling, proving his right to a vote and then casting it; now with an increase, albeit modest, in the number of voters and a reduced period for polling, it became necessary to establish a right to a vote in advance, hence electoral registers.

The 1832 Reform Act started a process of change in two other respects that affect usage of electoral registers by researchers and this has continued down to the present, being modified at regular intervals. It extended the franchise and redistributed the parliamentary seats thus modifying who might be found on electoral registers and in which registers they might be found. Before 1832 the franchise for English counties was essentially confined to 40-shilling freeholders. In English boroughs there was no uniformity and the franchise was determined by custom or charter. Boroughs were distinguished as corporation boroughs where only the corporation had the vote, freemen boroughs where the vote was extended to freemen ('originally an ancient status which although it meant a man was not bound by serfdom to a local lord freemen would be required to undertake municipal duties'), 'scot and lot' boroughs where ratepayers voted ('based on the householder's payment (scot) of a share (lot) of local poor and church rates'), and 'potwalloper' boroughs ('the potwalloper qualification was a householder who was self-sustaining i.e making no claim on poor relief, and who had their own hearth on which they could cook or boil (wallop) a pot') where all householders had the vote, each with variations. In Scotland the franchise was very restricted: in counties it was also confined to 40-shilling freeholders but interpreted as 40 shillings at thirteenth-century values adjusted for inflation to around £70; in Edinburgh the corporation had the vote; and in other burghs the electorate consisted of a single delegate from each contributing burgh (themselves elected on a corporation franchise). Before 1832 there were fewer than 5,000 electors in all 45 Scottish constituencies combined, less than the total of votes received routinely by successful candidates in a constituency with a wide franchise like Westminster. Throughout the country, whatever the franchise, the vote was confined to adults (those over 21) who were male.

In 1832 the borough franchise was standardised and simplified and the existing county franchise was supplemented by a complex variety of new franchises. In English boroughs the franchise was now extended to the £10 householder, that is an occupier of property, either as owner or tenant, worth £10 per year, or lodgers if the value of the property occupied divided by the number of lodgers exceeded £10 per year. In all cases the householder had to have been in the possession of the property for twelve months. Existing franchise holders retained their franchise provided they had resided in the borough or within seven miles for six months. The burgh/borough franchise in Scotland and Ireland was now very similar to England: in Scottish burghs occupiers of houses, whether as proprietors, tenants, life-renters or joint occupiers, valued at £10 per year and non-resident owners of the same had the vote; in Ireland £10 occupiers and resident freemen had the vote. In English counties 40-shilling freeholders were joined by £10 freeholders (henceforth the basic qualification), £10 copyholders or long leaseholders (for 60 years) and £50 tenants or short leaseholders (for 20 years), joint tenants whose separate interests amounted to 40-shilling freehold or £10 leasehold. The vote was also extended to certain mortgagees, annuitants and shareholders in landed property of sufficient value, and to certain office-holders, beneficed clergy and irremovable schoolmasters, parish clerks and sextants. In Scotland the county franchise was extended to owners of land of £10 annual value, 57-year leaseholders and life holders with a £10 yearly interest, 19 year leaseholders with a £50 yearly interest and tenants at £50 rent or whose interest had cost them £300. In Ireland the county franchise was extended to £10 freeholders, copyholders and leaseholders for life or 60 years, and £20 leaseholders of 14 years.

The 1867 Reform Act (1868 in Scotland) extended the borough/burgh franchise to all householders subject to a one year residential qualification and the payment of rates, and to lodgers occupying lodgings worth £10 per year subject also to one years residence. It extended the county franchise by including those occupying land worth £12 per year (£14 in Scotland) or owning land worth £5 a year. The 1884 Reform Act extended the 1867/68 householder and lodger franchise for boroughs/burghs to counties and created an occupation franchise for those with lands or tenements worth £12 a year. For the first time the franchise was substantially uniform in constituencies throughout Great Britain. Qualifications in the 1918 Reform Act were simplified and extended to all adult men resident in the constituency, to all women over 30 and a separate vote was given to those with a business qualification and to graduates of British Universities. The period of residential qualification was reduced from a year to six months. As a temporary measure men aged 19 or 20 serving with the armed services were given the vote and servicemen absent from home were to be registered for the first time as 'absent voters.' In 1926 the period of residential qualification was reduced further to three months to compensate in part for the abolition of the half-yearly register (which reverted to annual) and in 1928 the voting age for women was reduced to 21 so that the male and female franchise was now the same.

In 1948, by the RPA 1948 (11&12 Geo.6 cap.65), the business and university franchise were abolished; leaving just the residential franchise and a 'one person one vote' system was fully established. A period of residential qualification was abolished though a qualifying date was retained. Further extensions to the franchise after this have, of necessity, been modest. In 1950 'Y' voters were added to the registers. Those who failed to qualify for the annual register by reason of age but who would have qualified for the second of the former half-yearly registers were now added to the register with a 'Y' against their name and could vote on or after the date that the second register would have come into force. In 1969 the voting age was reduced to 18 and the method of calculation was changed. Hitherto to cast a vote one had to have reached voting age (then 21) by the qualifying date over four months before the register came into force and if one's birthday was badly placed the wait could be a good deal longer. Even 'Y' voters had a minimum four-month wait. Now those reaching the new voting age of 18 during the currency of a register were to be entered on it with the date of their birth against their names and if an election occurred on or after that date they could exercise their right to vote.

In 1983 it became possible for the first time to add someone to a register already in force. Only those on the register could vote and, formerly, if a name was omitted from the draft register and the omission was not corrected in the period permitted for amendment, the final register would omit the name and the person concerned would be disfranchised until the error was corrected in the register for the following year. Now an error could be corrected in the current register up to but not beyond the date that the writ was issued for an election.

Absent voters had been enfranchised since 1918 (now those on crown service or British Council staff temporarily away from home) but in 1985 some people permanently living out of the country were also enfranchised. These 'overseas voters' were those who had lived within the country in the previous five years and had been shown on an electoral register as eligible to vote. In 1989 the period of absence was extended to 20 years and extended to those who had been too young to vote when they lived in Britain but who had now reached voting age. Overseas voters are entered on the register for the polling district where they had formerly resided, being added at the end as 'other voters.'

Finally, the franchise is defined also by those who are specifically excluded. These at present form a very odd quintet of categories - aliens, lunatics, felons, minors and peers - and all of these may, to some extent, be found on the registers.

Although no alien can vote at parliamentary elections, the registers contain the names of a surprising number of people who are not citizens of the United Kingdom. Any Commonwealth citizen (formerly they were classified as British subjects) resident in Britain can vote. When the Republic of Ireland left the Commonwealth its citizens were declared not to be aliens and they too can vote. Moreover, other European Union citizens who are aliens and therefore are disfranchised at parliamentary elections can vote at European and local government elections and so can be entered on the registers.

Residents of mental institutions detained for criminal activity are disfranchised but all other psychiatric inpatients, either voluntary or detained, may register to vote. However, prisoners serving a custodial sentence do not have the right to vote. Prisoners on remand are able to vote under the provisions of the Representation of the People Act 2000.

This blanket ban on convicted prisoners voting was ruled to be unlawful by the European Court of Human Rights in 2004 on the grounds that it breached Protocol 1, Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights. However, Parliament has not changed the law to conform with the judgement. For a full statement of the UK's position, consult White, Isobel and Horne, Alexander. Prisoners' voting rights, 2014 (Commons Library Standard note; SN01764).

Minors, now defined as those under 18, cannot vote but those who will reach their majority during the lifetime of the register may be entered upon it and, as already mentioned, can vote as soon as they reach their eighteenth birthday.

Formerly peers in general could not vote in parliamentary elections as they were already represented in Parliament in the Upper House. Now the position is more complicated. Life peers and, as an interim measure, 92 representative peers from among the hereditary peers remain in the House of Lords and cannot vote for members of the House of Commons. The rest can but all peers can vote in European and local government elections and so all are eligible to be entered on the register.

Formerly some other groups were deprived of the vote - policemen until 1887, postmasters, election agents, commissioners and collectors of government revenues, and those on public relief until 1918 and conscientious objectors until 1923.

Constituencies

Parliamentary representation in the United Kingdom has always been on the basis that MPs represent communities and, although modern constituencies now rarely represent civic entities, they are still drawn so as to represent areas with a perceived community of interests though the perception is sometimes strained. This principle is in conflict with that of equal-electorate constituencies, and it is significant that the latter has only been very imperfectly applied and deviations from the quota (the average size of electorate) have been justified on the grounds of community. The widest deviations in either direction are for constituencies with unmistakable bounds to their communities - islands or island groups. The constituency with the largest electorate is the Isle of Wight, over one-and-a-half times the average while, at the other extreme, Na h-Eileannan an Iar (formerly the Western Isles) is less than a third of the average. Community is also the justification for the only legislation concerning the name of a constituency. With the abolition of the business vote in 1948, the electorate of the City of London became far too small to justify a separate constituency but since then any constituency that contained it was to include 'City of London' in its name. Britain has flirted several times with electoral systems of proportional representation but a 'list system' which divorces representation from any community smaller than a province has never been adopted for any United Kingdom election though partial list systems have recently been adopted for European elections and those for devolved governments.

The influence of the concept of community has also determined that there should be separate and different quotas for the constituent countries of the United Kingdom. When Ireland was partitioned and a separate government was formed in Northern Ireland with a devolved government within the United Kingdom, its parliamentary representation at Westminster was reduced and, when this Stormont Parliament was abolished, it was restored, after some delay, to a level broadly comparable to that of England. In comparison, Scotland and Wales have been over-represented on the grounds that they both contain a considerable amount of sparsely-populated rural areas difficult to represent if too large. Recently devolved government has been restored to Northern Ireland and granted to Scotland and Wales. Progress in Northern Ireland has been fitful with devolution being brought in and suspended several times and so far it has been though wise not to tamper with the level of its representation at Westminster. Devolution in Wales is limited and the Welsh Assembly does not have legislative powers (though this may change) and its level of representation has not been altered. Scotland, however, has a stable devolved government with powers of legislation and there has been a redistribution of its (Westminster) seats, separate from any general redistribution, which had reduced their number. Scotland remains somewhat over-represented compared to England though less so than formerly.

Until 1832 the communities represented by constituencies can readily be stated: whole counties and boroughs represented with minor exceptions by two MPs in England and in Irish counties and by one MP in Scotland and Wales and in Irish boroughs. The reforms of 1832 began a process of change which gradually dissolved this simplicity and ultimately replaced it with another but different simplicity of broadly uniform constituencies of approximate equal electorates. The Great Reform Act, as is well known, disfranchised many 'rotten boroughs' in England and enfranchised the great provincial cities and the London suburbs hitherto unrepresentative. But there were other, more subtle, redistributive changes. Several smaller English boroughs that escaped disfranchisement for the time being had their representation reduced to one MP and some of the new boroughs were created single-member seats. No counties had their representation reduced but the Isle of Wight, newly created a separate parliamentary county by separation from Hampshire, was created a single-member seat and this remains the only constituency that has remained totally unaltered in bounds or representation ever since. Many counties had their representation increased and this was effected in two ways. Some counties were awarded a third MP while others were divided into two (or, in the case of Yorkshire, three), each division returning two MPs. The notion of a county being a community represented as such in Parliament was maintained by having a single returning officer and a unified system for compiling electoral registers, but the output was two registers (three in Yorkshire) and for practical purposes each division was a separate constituency.

In 1867 constituency changes in England continued the trend. More small boroughs were disfranchised or reduced to single-member seats and new boroughs were created (all single-member). As yet no boroughs were divided like counties but five were given a third MP (Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester and, in Scotland, Glasgow) and two, created single-member seats in 1832, were given a second MP (Salford and, in Wales, Merthyr Tydfil). County divisions were increased. In its simplest form this was achieved by redividing counties formerly in two divisions into three. Thus Cheshire, Northern and Southern Divisions became Cheshire North Cheshire Division, Mid Cheshire Division and South Cheshire Division (note also the change in terminology for the divisions). In some counties the redivision was more complicated. In Kent and Surrey where growth had been concentrated in one half of the county, one division became a separate parliamentary county with two divisions and the other remained unaltered, thus Kent, Eastern Division and West Kent (Parliamentary County), Mid Kent Division and West Kent Division, and Surrey, Western Division and East Surrey, East Surrey Division and East Surrey Mid Surrey Division. In Lancashire both the 1832 divisions became separate 'counties,' each with two divisions of their own. Yorkshire was different again. It was unique in 1832 in having three divisions, each Riding being a division; now each division or Riding became a separate parliamentary county. The East and North Ridings became undivided counties but the West Riding had further divisions. In fact it had become a separate parliamentary county a few years earlier. In 1861, after several boroughs had been disfranchised for corrupt practices, it was decided to restore the number of MP s in part by creating two new seats, Birkenhead borough was one and the other was achieved by making the West Riding Division of Yorkshire a county with a Northern and Southern Division. In 1867 these were redivided to accommodate in addition an Eastern Division, originally to have been called the Mid Division.

In 1885, at the next redistribution of seats, the predominance of two-member constituencies in England disappeared. All the counties were redivided into single-member divisions or, in a few cases, became undivided single-member counties. Most county divisions were given two names, one incorporating a compass-point designation and the other a locality name, in the form of, for example, 'Parliamentary County of Buckinghamshire, Southern or Wycombe Division.' This characteristic but unnecessarily cumbersome form of name tends to lead to confusion as few reference works use the full double form of name and will refer either to Buckinghamshire, Southern or Buckinghamshire, Wycombe suggesting wrongly two distinct divisions. Kent and Surrey reverted to being single counties (each with several divisions) but Lancashire and the West Riding were further partitioned. The four divisions of the two parliamentary counties of North and South Lancashire now each became counties themselves, with divisions of their own. Likewise, the three divisions of the West Riding, now renamed 'Parts' became counties with divisions. The resulting constituency names such as 'Parliamentary County of South East Lancashire, Heywood Division' or 'Parliamentary County of the West Riding of Yorkshire, Eastern Part, Spen Valley Division' was anything but snappy, even if double-name divisions were avoided. At the same time most two- or three-member borough seats were divided into single-member divisions or became undivided single-member seats. A handful of suitably-sized boroughs and some universities remained two-member seats and a dwindling number continued thus down to 1948.

At the 1918 redistribution, the parliamentary counties were assimilated to the administrative counties established in 1889. These were the same as the ancient counties for the most part but Suffolk and Sussex formed two counties each, East and West in both cases. Likewise, the Isle of Ely and the Soke of Peterborough formed counties separate from Cambridgeshire and Northamptonshire though in the latter case they were conjoined for parliamentary purposes as the 'Parliamentary County of Northampton and the Soke of Peterborough.' Lancashire and the West Riding were restored as single counties. Lastly the three 'Parts' of Lincolnshire - Lindsey, Holland and Kesteven - formed separate counties, the last conjoined with Rutland for parliamentary purposes as the 'Parliamentary County of the Parts of Kesteven and Rutland.' The confusing system of county divisions with two names introduced in 1885 were now abandoned and divisions now had either compass-point names or locality names but not both. For boroughs the changes were many but the principles were unaltered - multiple-membered boroughs were composed of multiple single-membered divisions except for a few undivided boroughs with two-member seats. The remaining boroughs were single-member seats.

The changes in successive redistributions described above essentially concerned England. Developments in Scotland and Wales were more modest largely because constituencies were single-member seats to start with. In Wales in 1832 Merthyr Tydfil was created a borough, Swansea became the head-borough of a new district of boroughs in the west of Glamorganshire, and three counties became two-member seats. The subsequent redistributions up to 1948 modified but did not fundamentally alter this pattern: new boroughs were created in urban South Wales, some growing counties and boroughs became two-member seats and these were later divided, some districts of boroughs were merged into their respective counties and the Pembroke and Haverfordwest districts were joined together in a single district. In 1885 Swansea District of Boroughs was divided, Swansea Town Division containing most of Swansea and Swansea District Division the rest of Swansea and the remaining contributing boroughs. In Scotland in 1832 the paired counties were conjoined (in different pairings), sending MPs to Westminster, one per pair instead of to alternate Parliaments and several burghs were detached from Districts and received their own representation. As in Wales subsequent redistributions merely modified the system. Larger counties got additional MP s and were later divided, smaller ones were joined with their neighbours, larger burghs became two-member seats or were divided and districts of burghs were created, modified or merged into counties. Irish developments broadly followed the English pattern which there meant fewer boroughs and more county divisions.

In 1948 there was for the first time a uniform pattern of constituencies throughout the United Kingdom. The last of the two-member boroughs were abolished and the concept of parliamentary counties and boroughs ('burghs' in Scotland) disappeared. In Wales and Scotland districts of boroughs/burghs were abolished although a couple survived for a while in Scotland in a different form. University seats (see Appendix 4 for more details) were also abolished and henceforth each seat was a geographical constituency returning a single MP. True, constituencies were either county constituencies or borough constituencies but the figment of the unity of a county or a borough was abandoned. The distinction was essentially concerned with electoral expenses. The allowance for this is higher in county constituencies which tend to be larger in area which presupposes the need for more travel and greater expense. Where compass-point designations were used the county or borough name had, of necessity, to be retained and for boroughs the borough name tended to be retained anyway but not always so, especially in London - Baron's Court constituency formed in 1955 being an early example. In 1971 there was an attempt to graft on to existing constituency names in London the names of the recently formed London Boroughs in which they were situated. The result was not a happy one (for example Kensington and Chelsea Kensington and Kensington and Chelsea Chelsea) and generally it was not repeated in subsequent redistributions, though some, like Lewisham Deptford, survive.

In this period some naming conventions have developed. In the days of parliamentary counties and boroughs all divisions had inverted names, Parliamentary Borough (or County) of -----, ----- Division but, after 1948, inversion was retained only for boroughs (e.g. Croydon North East or Birmingham Edgbaston) and direct order was used for counties (e.g. Mid Staffordshire or North Norfolk). This has recently produced a curious result. In 1991 the rapid growth of Milton Keynes forced the rare creation of a new seat between general boundary reviews and Milton Keynes County Constituency was split in two. One of the resulting seats was compact and designated a borough constituency while the other contained a considerable rural hinterland and was designated a county constituency, hence Milton Keynes South West BC but North East Milton Keynes CC (but at the 1995 redistribution this convention was ignored - Milton Keynes North CC and South BC both had inverted names). This convention is not always followed in Scotland and Wales and it is frequently unobserved in reference works. For this reason in the constituency list that constitutes the main part of this work full details are given under the official form of the constituency name but cross-references are provided from inverted names to direct-order names and vice versa as appropriate. Another convention, not always followed, is that seats at the heart of a borough may well be called 'Central' (e.g. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Central BC) but one at the heart of a county will tend to be called 'Mid' (e.g. Mid Kent CC).

With each redistribution of seats and especially with the division of counties and later of boroughs, there was a need for new names for the constituencies that resulted but some name changes seem to be rather a matter of fashion or whim; examples are names such as Orkney and Shetland/Zetland; Grimsby/ Great Grimsby; York/ City of York; Stratford-on-Avon/Stratford; Stoke-upon-Trent/Stoke-on-Trent; Marylebone/St Marylebone and others of a similar nature. Some changes do have a logic though this may not be readily apparent; thus The Hartlepoons became plain Hartlepool when the municipal boroughs of Hartlepool and West Hartlepool were merged under the name of the former. Other changes can seem almost perverse. Throughout the time that the City of Chester was a parliamentary borough it was called Chester but when it was merged into the parliamentary county the division that included it (and later the county constituency) was called City of Chester. In 1918 the counties of Breconshire and Radnorshire were united to form a new parliamentary county called logically Breconshire and Radnorshire. It has remained substantially unchanged ever since but became Brecon and Radnor CC in 1948 and Brecon and Radnorshire CC in 1995 (Brecknock and Radnorshire was originally recommended). Such examples could be multiplied. One effect of the increasing tendency of constituencies to straddle local government boundaries in an attempt to equalise electorates is the creation of unwieldy composite names trying to reflect the composition of the resulting constituency. Some recent examples are: Suffolk Central and Ipswich North; South Holland and the Deepings; Ross, Skye and Inverness West; Regents Park and Kensington North; Dumfriesshire, Clydesdale and Tweeddale; and Carmarthen West and South Pembrokeshire. That such forms can be avoided is shown by names such as Baron's Court which comprised parts of the Metropolitan Boroughs of Fulham and of Kensington; and Tyne Bridge formed from portions of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and of Gateshead.

There have only been three methods of compiling electoral registers since the beginning. From 1832 until 1914/15 lists of electors (draft registers) were compiled by parish overseers (overseers of the poor) from the rate books and their personal knowledge and issued for inspection. Claims from those omitted and objections to those included were considered by a revising barrister appointed for the purpose, and an appeal from his decisions lay originally to the House of Commons and later to the High Court. After the consequential amendments had been made the list was reissued as the final register and came into immediate effect. When registration resumed in 1918 a new system of compilation was introduced which, with a break for most of the 1940s, has remained ever since. The principal officer of a local authority (traditionally called Town Clerk or Clerk to the County Council but now usually called the Chief Executive) was appointed Electoral Registration Officer for his authority. He was obliged to compile the list of electors by canvass. Nowadays this is achieved by distributing forms to be completed by each household and either arranging for the completed forms to be collected or supplying reply-paid envelopes for their return. Registration Officers also consider claims and objections and publish the final register. Traditionally the register was literally final - any omissions had to stand until the next register was compiled a year later - but in 1983 errors could be corrected and from the 2002 register changes resulting from altered circumstances could be made too. The British Library largely ignores such loose amendment sheets that it receives. From 2002 two registers have been issued, a full register of restricted availability and an 'edited' (from 2014 'open') register made generally available. More details of this important change are given below. Since the reorganization of local government in the early 1970s the registration authorities have been London boroughs, metropolitan boroughs, and shire county districts in England and Wales, regions and island authorities in Scotland, and the province as a whole in Northern Ireland. With the formation of unitary authorities in the 1990s these too have become registration authorities. Electoral registration was suspended in 1939 but a national register was compiled to facilitate the issue of identity cards and ration books but this was never published. When electoral registration was resumed in 1945, local canvassing was not at first resumed to compile the registers; instead printed constituency registers were derived as a sub-set of the national register. In 1949 canvassing was resumed and in 1951 the National Register was abolished and the records were destroyed, all but a few sample records preserved in the National Archives.

The contents of registers

The electoral registers are lists of people entitled to vote in the polling districts in which they are listed and are the sole evidence of that right to vote. No-one can vote elsewhere than where they are registered and anyone omitted from the register (including now subsequent amendment sheets) cannot vote at all, irrespective of how well he or she otherwise fulfils the conditions for doing so. The normal arrangement is in address order; that is to say, within the register for each polling district, streets are listed in alphabetical order and properties within them are listed in sequence which is not the same as in numerical order. Where, as is commonly the case, houses are numbered on the 'odds and evens' principal, the registers will follow suit, one side of the road first (normally odds) and then the other, and, if a block of flats breaks the sequence of house numbers, then the register will do likewise listing residents by their flat number where the break occurs. Of course remote rural areas are not susceptible to a street arrangement of the registers and in such cases the registration officer is empowered to use alternative arrangements, normally an alphabetical order of voter within the smallest unit of local administration - parish, community or townland. Some registers will contain a mixture of street order arrangement and alphabetical. Overseas voters entitled to vote by virtue of former residence are not listed at their former address but at the end of the relevant polling district register, listed as 'other voters.' This mainly address-based arrangement of the printed registers is not designed for easy searching, presupposing, as it does, that one knows the address of the person being sought or at least the locality in which he or she lives, and people often ask why it is used. The short answer is that the law, in the form of the Registration of the people regulations 1986 (SI 1986 No. 1081) requires it so and it is a convenient arrangement at polling stations to check the entitlement to vote - the prime function of the register. Voters are asked for their address and are then ticked off on the register before being handed their voting slip.

In fact this arrangement is fortuitous and evolved in the late nineteenth century. Before that the parish overseers, who were responsible for compiling the unrevised lists of electors and issuing the revised registers, dealt with their own parish and the constituency register combined the registers of the parishes within it. The arrangement was therefore alphabetically by parish and within the parish alphabetically by voter. The change to the modern system began with the passage of the Parliamentary and municipal registration Act 1878 (40&41 Vic. cap. 26) which stated: 'If the local authority so direct, a register of parliamentary voters and burgess rolls shall be arranged in the same order in which the qualifying premises appear in the rate books.' The significance of the reference to the rate books is that for centuries the rates had been collected by collectors who went round house to house, as a postman does delivering letters, entering payment as he went so that rate books, and the burgess rolls (registers of property-based municipal electors) which had always been based on them, were in street order. The 1878 Act was confined to boroughs and was merely permissive but later legislation extended its scope and made the rate-book order (that is, street order) obligatory wherever practicable.

The content of individual entries in registers is now standard; for each address is listed all the voters residing there, listed by surname followed by the first forename (middle names are reduced to initials or even omitted). For a few years from 1945 the National Registration Identity Number was used to distinguish between two people with the same first name and/or initial at the same address. Entries are numbered in sequence, starting afresh for each polling district and these numbers should not be mistaken for house numbers within the street. Attainers (those reaching 18 during the year) are listed with the date of their eighteenth birthday on or after which they can vote. Others with a restricted franchise have this indicated by a letter prefix printed in bold: E or U for those entitled to vote only at European elections, F at parliamentary or European elections (not local), G only at local elections, and K or L at local and European elections (not parliamentary). At the end of the sequence are listed 'other voters' for the registration district, overseas voters with a franchise based on former residence. Absent voters, those temporarily absent on government services (principally the armed services) are listed at their normal address and are no longer separately identified but formerly they were identified by the prefix A or S. Likewise those qualified as jurors are no longer identified with a J and the former significance of Y voters has already been explained. Finally, a Z marker appearing in a copy of the full register indicates that the person does not appear in the edited/open version of the register. Note that use of Z markers is compulsory only in copies of the full register sold to government departments or credit reference agencies. It should not be present on copies of the full register held by the British Library.

Before 1948 there were several different franchises and these would be identified either by separate sequences in the registers or by coding, or, in certain circumstances, by separate registers. Between 1945 and 1948 separate ratepayers registers and business registers were compiled and between 1918 and 1939 absent voters were listed separately, often in foolscap typescript lists not in printed registers. For a few years these contained additional information (a serviceman's rank, unit and number) which is a boon to researchers but irrelevant for electoral purposes and the information was soon dropped. Throughout the existence of the university franchise, entitlement was separately recorded. Parliamentary registers for university constituencies certainly exist and the British Library's modest holding are listed in Appendix 4 but it is possible that graduate or alumni registers issued by universities may sometimes have doubled as parliamentary registers.

The registers with the richest information for researchers were those issued between the 1885 redistribution and the First World War. They are also the most complex with several sequences representing the different franchises within registers for the same polling area. The different franchises are the reason for the extra information. Voters listed at their residence with a business franchise will have their business address also listed; those with a lodger's franchise will have their weekly rent, the number of rooms rented and the name of their landlord, or more usually landlady, listed. Contrary to popular supposition, women can be found in registers of this period and not just as lodgers' landladies. Although women only gained the parliamentary vote in 1918 (and then only if they were over 30), some women had the municipal franchise from 1869 and could vote in county council elections when these started twenty years later. The Municipal corporations elections Act 1869 (32&33 Vic., cap. 55) contained a final section (a late amendment) stating that words importing the masculine gender in the Act were to include females. This had the effect of enfranchising women ratepayer voters. At first this effect was limited; rates were a property tax and married women were deemed to have no property so only spinsters or widows who were ratepayers had the municipal vote, a select few. But with the reform of married women's property law and the merger of local government and parliamentary registers an increasing number of women can be found in electoral registers. Having said this, however, on examination of registers pre 1918, it can be seen that a number of married women also had the municipal vote as a consequence of their husband's profession.

Dates of registers

The dates of registers are important for their proper use and the subject is more complicated than might be supposed. There are currently three dates associated with registers which are significant to researchers, and before 1948 there was a fourth. The first is the date that registers comes into force, since 2001 this has been 1 December each year with some minor variations. In 2013, while the publication date for the revised register remained as 1st December in Northern Ireland, the registers in England and Wales came into force on 17 February 2014 and in Scotland on 10th March 2014. With the issue of the new (2015) register on 1st December 2014 the previous pattern will be resumed for England and Wales. However, the 2015 Scottish registers will not be published until February 2015.

The second is when it ceases to be in force, now the following 30 November; but more important than either is the qualifying date. This is the datum point for all the information contained in the register, the date by which all voters have to be qualified to be entered on the register, and is the previous 15 October (except for Northern Ireland, which has a system of continuous registration and no annual canvas since 2006). Traditionally if one moved after the qualifying date, even if the new register had not yet come into force; when it did, one could only vote where one was registered, that is where one was residing on the qualifying date. Before 1948 residential qualification not only required that voters live in the constituency in which they voted but that they should have done so for a qualifying period. This was twelve months before 1918, six months between then and 1926, and three months between 1927 and 1948 and was computed backwards from the qualifying date. It was not necessary to have lived at the same address for the qualifying period, only that one had lived in the same borough or county (London being treated as a single borough for the purpose) or in an adjacent one.

The present dates of registers, that is the dates that they are in force, have been so for just over a decade although the qualifying date has remained virtually unaltered for over half-a-century (it moved from 10 October in 2000 to 15 October in 2001). Before that there had been many changes going back to the start of registration.

In England and Wales registers came into force on 1 November from 1832 to 1843 and that for 1843 lasted 13 months. From 1844 to 1866 they came into force (as now) on 1 December. There followed three rather confusing years. The 1866 register again lasted 13 months from 1 December 1866 to the end of 1867 so there was no '1867' register. The 1868 register was intended to be the first of a series covering the calendar year but, as part of the Reform Act that year, the intended 1869 register was brought forward to 1 November 1868. The first (January) 1868 register lasted only ten months and the November register lasted 14 months so again there was no '1869' register. From 1870 to 1915 registers covered the calendar year except the in 1885 and 1886. As in 1868, Reform Act legislation brought forward the 1886 register to 7 November 1885 which lasted to the end of 1886 so there was no '1886' register. In 1868 and 1885 when there were two registers in each case beginning in those years, the first is identified in this work as '1868' and '1885' and the second as '1868/69' and '1885/86' respectively. Throughout this period a curious exclusive dating system was used to describe the currency of registers so that, for example, the 1892 register was described as being in force between 31 December 1891 and 1 January 1893. Registration was suspended at the start of the First World War but as the qualifying date at that time was 15 July, the process of compiling the 1915 register had already started and was allowed to be completed, so that '1915' was the last 'pre-War' register.

Under the RPA 1918 (7&8 Geo. 5 cap. 64) registration was resumed but on a different timing. Registers were issued twice yearly, the 'Spring' register coming into force on 15 April each year (deferred to 15 May in 1919 and 1920) and the 'Autumn' register coming into force on 15 October, beginning with the Autumn 1918 register. This lasted only until 1926 when the 'Spring' register was abolished as an economy measure and, to compensate, the qualifying period was reduced by six months. From 1927 to 1939 the register, once again annual, came into force on 15 October (brought forward to 1 May in 1929 and deferred to 15 November in 1939). Registration was again suspended in 1939 and there were no registers in 1940 to 1944. Registers coming into force on 15 October resumed in 1945 and continued until 1949 but in addition there were two extra registers, one in 1945 coming into force on 7 May to facilitate an anticipated general election and another, a partial register listing servicemen and those recently demobilised, coming into force on 1 March 1946. The 1949 register was intended to be the first of a series of half-yearly ones and, indeed, the next was a 'Spring' 1950 register but, again as an economy measure registers became annual and a system of 'Y' voters, already described, was introduced to compensate for this. From and including 1950 they came into force on 16 March until 1954 and on 16 February from 1955 until 2001. Up till that time all registers had been preceded by draft registers so that voters could check the accuracy of the register and have corrections made before it came into force. Latterly the draft register had been issued in December. Under legislation that will be described more fully below, current registers could be amended and draft registers were no longer considered necessary. Therefore the 'final' register henceforth was published and came into force on 1 December starting in 2001.

In Scotland registers came into force on 15 October in 1832 and on 15 September from 1833 to 1856 in burghs and to 1861 in counties. From 1857 in burghs and 1862 in counties registers came into force on 1 November without any variation until 1914 (unlike in England and Wales there was no 1915 registers). For the first time, when registers resumed in 1918 they came into force on the same date throughout Great Britain, and Scotland has followed the same practice as England and Wales ever since. In Ireland registers came into force on a different date (for 1885/86, the only year for which the Library has any pre-partition Irish registers, it was 18 November) and continued to do so for Northern Ireland. Until 1939 Northern Irish registers came into force on 15 December, except for 1929 when it was 1 May as in the rest of the United Kingdom. From 1945 to 1949 Northern Irish registers came into force on 2 October until 1949 and on 2 April from 1950 until 1954. Since 1955 registers have come into force on the same date throughout the whole of the United Kingdom (16 February from 1955 to 2001 and on 1 December since 2001), the exceptions being as noted above in 2014 and 2015. The two extra registers in 1945 and 1946 also came into force on the same date in Northern Ireland (7 May 1945 and 1 March 1946).

For research purposes the qualifying date may be of more relevance than the date registers come into force but this date is less easy to establish. This is now explicitly stated on registers but this was not always so. In England and Wales the qualifying date was 31 July until 1878 and 15 July from 1879 until 1914. From 1918 it was 15 January for the Spring register while they lasted and 15 July for the Autumn or annual registers until 1928. It was 1 December 1928 for the 1929 register and 1 June for the 1930-39 and 1945-49 registers. The qualifying date for the May 1945 register was 1 January and for the March 1946 one was the preceding 1 December. From 1950 to 1954 it was the previous 20 November and from 1955 to 2000 the previous 10 October, after which it became 15 October from 2001.

In Scotland the qualifying date was 31 August in 1832 and 20 July from 1833 to 1914; from 1918 until 1949 (including the extra registers in 1945 and 1946) it was the same as in England and Wales except for 1929 when it was 15 December 1928. From 1950 to 1954 it was 1 December but since 1955 it has again been the same as in England and Wales.

In Northern Ireland it took a little longer to check registration details and the qualifying date was historically a little earlier than elsewhere. Up to 1949 the qualifying date was 30 April for a 2 October register and from 1950 to 1954 it was the previous 31 October for a 2 April register. From 1955 to 2000 it was the previous 15 September, after which it became 15 October from 2001 to 2006. The last annual canvas for Northern Ireland took place in 2006, after which the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland moved to continuous registration. The Office is increasingly pro-active in encouraging registration. They visit all schools in Northern Ireland annually to register eligible students and carry out a number of other initiatives such as registration clinics prior to elections. As well as asking citizens to inform the Electoral Office when they move they also use alerts from other government departments. On receipt of an alert the Office writes to the citizen and invites them to re-register. Under the Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (2002 c.13) household registration was replaced by a new system of individual registration. This was primarily introduced to overcome impersonation and electoral abuse, which were widely perceived to occur. Under the new rules, those having their name included on the register must provide personal identification information in the form of their date of birth, national insurance number and signature as well as photographic evidence in order to obtain an electoral identity card. From December 2008, the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland has issued two versions of the registers for Northern Ireland constituencies annually, one on 1 December and a revision on 1 April or 1 May. The revised register continues to be published annually on 1 December and if there is an election it is revised and republished before the election.

A summary of recent developments

Since the first edition of this work there have been major developments in electoral law which affect the production of registers, their content, their use, even their utility for research, and the presentation of information about them in this work. From the start of registration in 1832 until 2001 registers have been available for anyone to consult and to copy details. At first the number of people included were few but as the franchise expanded they included more and more people so that, for many years now, virtually the whole adult population is included. Registers have always been printed and were available for public consultation at the premises of the registrars who issue them and, as public libraries developed, they could also usually be consulted there. In recent decades, modern technology has made the task of consultation progressively easier. First the photocopier made copying easier (and more accurate) than transcription but more recently the development of electronic data has transformed the situation. Registration authorities now compile registers electronically and for internal use can consult them electronically though the published output remains in print form. The same authorities are empowered to sell data from the registers, either extracts or whole registers for their area. Some local authorities such as the London Borough of Greenwich used to refuse to sell whole registers but they were a small minority and commercial companies saw an opportunity to buy copies of all available registers, supplement them with data from telephone directories and charge the public for downloading specific information. For the first time it was possible to access information on virtually the whole adult population of the country with addresses and phone numbers and to search by name rather than address and this raised concerns about privacy.

By The Representation of the People Act 2000 (2000 cap. 2) and regulations made under it (The Representation of the People (England and Wales) Regulations 2001 (2001 No. 341) and Representation of the People (England and Wales) (Amendment) Regulations 2006 (2006 no. 752) as amended, and parallel regulations for Scotland and Northern Ireland) this problem was addressed.

Henceforth registration officers were to produce two registers or two forms of the register, the 'full register' which should continue to include everyone entitled to vote but also an 'edited register' which should omit the names of anyone who did not wish to appear on it. The full register was to be used for electoral purposes (including allowing voters to check that they had been correctly entered on the register) and, on a 'need-to-know' basis, for the purposes of crime prevention and checking credit worthiness. The edited register was available in principal without restrictions although registration authorities could charge for making it available at prescribed rates. From 2014 the edited register was renamed the open register. The registers received by the British Library are the full registers; with the Electoral Commission and the Office for National Statistics it is the only institution to receive a complete set of the full registers. Under the current regulations, the registers have to be consulted under supervision, and readers cannot photocopy extracts though hand-written transcripts are still permitted. For the same reason information from the full register cannot by law be given by phone either by the British Library or by public libraries or by registration officers though the last may confirm by phone whether or not the enquirer is on the current register. However, these restrictions are lifted once the register is over ten years old and the risk of privacy invasion has receded. The Electoral Commission set up to oversee the whole area of electoral law and which has a full set of current registers will not answer queries about their contents or make them available to consult.

These normally include electronic versions of the edited (from 2014 open) electoral register alongside other resources such as telephone directories. The edited/open register has been produced since December 2002, is available for sale without restrictions on use and contains the names of voters who have signaled that they have no objection to their personal details being disseminated and used for commercial purposes by not exercising their right to appear in the full version of the register only. However, notably in 2013 44% of voters "opted out" from the edited/open version of the electoral register.

As stated above the edited/open registers have been purchased by people finding services such as 192.com (www.192.com) and Tracesmart (www.tracesmart.co.uk) and are available for searching (for a fee) at their websites in combination with other directory-type information. A more comprehensive, although not exhaustive, list of the increasing number of electronic versions of the edited/open registers can be found in our Social Sciences Collection Guide UK Electoral Registers (<http://www.bl.uk/reshelp/findhelppretype/offpubs/electreg/electoralregisters.pdf>)

However in July 2008 Dr. Mark Walport and Richard Thomas undertook a review of the framework within which personal information is used in the public and private sectors (the data sharing review). They recommended that the Government should remove the provision in law which allows for the sale of the edited register and abolish it. In response the government held a consultation on the future of the edited register from November 2009 to February 2010. The Ministry of Justice consultation Electoral Registers: proposed changes to the Edited Register, 2009 offered the following options: abolition of the edited register, with or without extended access to the full register for marketing purposes, etc., imposing further restrictions on its use, replacing the current 'opt out' provision with an 'opt in', or producing more detailed guidance for the public about it. However the Conservative-Lib Dem Coalition Government which came to power in May 2010 introduced no changes and decided that the sale of the edited/open version of the register for commercial purposes should continue. (See White, Isobel and Horne, Alexander. Supply and sale of the electoral register, 2014 (Standard Note SN/PC/01020)).

The Representation of the People (England and Wales)(Amendment) Regulations 2006 (2006 no. 752) and parallel legislation for Scotland made provision that a data version of the electoral register should be deposited at the British Library and the National Library of Scotland in addition to their respective print entitlements. Under the same regulations the National Library of Wales is entitled to receive print and data copies of the Welsh registers and print or data copies of the English registers. The representation of the people legislation for Northern Ireland does not contain an entitlement for the British Library to obtain a data copy of these registers. The British Library has therefore been acquiring data versions of the English, Welsh and Scottish registers as well as the print versions, but as the former are delivered in a wide range of incompatible formats they have not been made available to the public. The Library is exploring options for normalizing and merging the files into a searchable dataset, albeit with the name search function disabled until 10 years after publication of the registers so as not to breach current legislation.

The Representation of the People Act 2000 (2000 c 2) formally introduced voluntary rolling electoral registration in England, Scotland and Wales to enable people to be added to (and deleted from) the electoral register at any time throughout the year. It had been possible since 1983 to correct actual errors in registers but the new legislation enabled any change that occurred in a current register to be notified to the registration officer and to appear in a monthly supplement (January to September) after which the amendments appeared in the following year's annual register. The British Library does not receive any of these monthly amendment lists (they total well in excess of 50,000 each year) When a reader orders a register for a given constituency for a given year, it will be the bound annual volume of the register which is supplied without any loose amendment sheets. With the ability to amend the register continuously it was no longer so important to get it as near absolutely correct in the first instance as formerly and the draft register, which had been a feature of the registration process from 1832, was abolished and the date that registers come into force was brought forward. The dating problem that has resulted (that a register coming into force on 1 December is dated to the year following) has already been alluded to. Other changes do not affect registers or the registration process.

The Westminster government introduced individual electoral registration (IER) in Northern Ireland in 2002 under the Electoral Fraud (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 as described above, but England, Wales and Scotland continued to use a system of householder registration under date of the constituency. The first registers for the constituencies formed in 1885 were the 1885/86 registers. The dates for the registers are the dates that they came into force and for English registers between 1870 and 1915 this poses no problem as registers came into force on 1 January each year but elsewhere and in other periods registers span two years.

In these cases, generally, the register's date is identified by the year that it came into force whether it was early or late in the year. To this there are two exceptions and the first is when there were two registers in one year. In 1868 and 1885 the first register of each year (beginning on 1 January) are identified as 1868 and 1885 while the second registers (beginning on 1 November and 7 November respectively and continuing till the end of the following year) are identified as 1868/69 and 1885/86. Between 1918 and 1926 inclusively two registers per year were published identified as the 'Spring' and 'Autumn' registers but if both are held only the year is given in this work (also, as the Autumn 1918 register was the only one for that year, it is identified just as '1918'). The two registers in 1945 and 1946 were not a revival of half-yearly registers and are identified by month, May and October 1945 and March and October 1946, though the Library has very few. The other exception is all the registers since those of December 2001. There had already been a '2001' register issued on 16 February and the new register would run for most of 2002 and was therefore identified as '2002' and subsequent registers have followed suit. This practice is ambiguous and against traditional usage and the usage of this work for earlier registers but it does follow the predominant current practice of the registers themselves and the Library feels constrained to follow that usage. In fact some earlier registers held which started late in the year have spine labels with dates added for the following year but have been identified here by their true date of commencement.

Because the Library has so few pre-partition registers for Ireland, it seems pointless to bulk out this work with many constituencies for which no registers are held and so the few that we do hold are listed in an appendix (Appendix 2). Anyone who wishes to have a checklist of all the pre-partition Irish constituencies is referred to Brian Walker's Parliamentary election results in Ireland, 1801-1921 (see Bibliography). Likewise the few university electoral registers that the Library holds are also listed in an appendix (Appendix 4). Other registers omitted from the main sequence are voters' registers for legislatures in the British Isles outside the United Kingdom, namely the Irish Free State (we hold no registers for the Republic of Ireland), the Isle of Man and Jersey (we hold nothing for Guernsey or the other Channel Islands) in Appendix 3 and for non-parliamentary registers such as burgess rolls and analogous lists, valuation rolls and jurors' lists in Appendix 5. The remaining appendices are not concerned with registers. Appendix 1 lists pre-1832 constituencies that did not survive to have registers, although a few gave their names to later constituencies that did have registers. Appendix 6 lists the Library's holdings of poll books. Poll books are superficially similar to electoral registers and are often used by researchers in the same way, which is why they are included here, but they differ from electoral registers in certain important respects. Electoral Registers are compiled on a regular basis (usually annually), cover all constituencies and aim to contain everyone entitled to vote. Poll books, by contrast are compiled only after an election has been held and normally list only those who have cast their votes showing how they voted (a few do contain the names of those who did not exercise their right to vote but this is rare). Published poll books date from the end of the seventeenth century to the introduction of the secret ballot and were by no means always published even in that period. Surprisingly until the publication of the first edition of this work, no comprehensive published list of the Library's holdings of them existed.

HOW TO FIND ELECTORAL REGISTERS IN THE BRITISH LIBRARY

Because the printed electoral registers held by the British Library are arranged principally in address order, they are of very limited use in tracing named individuals. Without an address or at least a fairly precise locality for the whereabouts of the person sought, it is generally best to use alternative directories that have a name order arrangement or commercial online people finding services which offer a name search facility for a fee. A number of these can be found listed in our Social Sciences Collection Guide Tracing living people and a short list of some of the increasing number of electronic versions of the edited/open registers can be found in another of our Social Sciences Collection Guides UK Electoral Registers. See <http://bl.uk/collection-guides/uk-electoral-registers>.

Leading family history website Findmypast and the British Library have worked in partnership to digitise the Library's collection of historic registers covering the period 1832-1932. Access to this dataset containing an estimated 220m voter records is available free in the Library's reading rooms. You can search this dataset by first name, surname, county, constituency and free text keyword, considerably simplifying the task of tracing your family. For more information please visit <http://www.findmypast.co.uk/electoral-registers>.

The following notes are intended as guidance for readers (both readers of this e-book and the Library's readers visiting the reading rooms) so they can identify the constituencies they want and then find out if the British Library holds the relevant register. The notes assume that an address or locality is known.

Before using this publication to discover whether the British Library has the register wanted, it is necessary to identify the constituency register required. To do this, one must first establish the period for which registers are needed. Since 1832, boundary revisions have taken place in 1867 (1868 in Scotland), 1885, 1918, 1948, 1955, 1970, 1983 and 1995, and there was a partial revision in 1944 when seats with electorates of over 100,000 were split into two or more. Each revision was the work of a Boundary Commission which generally published maps. The next Boundary Commission Report is due in September/October 2018. The Boundary Commission reports containing these were issued as parliamentary papers and can be consulted in that set but duplicates are on the ERR shelves, part of the Quick Reference collection in the Official Publications and Social Sciences Reading Room at the British Library's St Pancras site. They are listed in the bibliography at the end of this work. Until 1948, Parliament could alter Commission recommendations but generally the Commissions' maps are reliable indications of the spatial extent of constituencies and it is seldom necessary to consult the Acts of Parliament or Statutory Instruments that put the boundary changes into effect; however, the legislation concerned is available on the open shelves of the Reading Room, if necessary, and again it is listed in the bibliography.

The basic procedure is to pinpoint the place sought in an atlas of Britain or a street atlas of urban areas in print or online and compare it with the relevant Boundary Commission map to find the constituency wanted. There is a good selection of street atlases on the reference shelves of the Reading Room but readers may prefer to use online sources such as Street Map (www.streetmap.co.uk) Google Maps (<http://maps.google.co.uk/>). If registers for a given area need to be consulted for a period that spans a boundary revision then the process must be repeated for 'before' and 'after' the revision. This process is laborious and some of the Boundary Commission maps are inadequate for the purpose, but it is essential to verify the constituency as the name alone cannot be relied upon. The post-town of an address or the registration district name on a marriage certificate may be different from any constituency name of the period. Worse still, it may be the same as an actual constituency but with widely different boundaries (see Example 2, below). While verification of constituencies is essential there are sometimes easier ways of doing this.

For registers valid for the 1995 and English 2010 boundary changes (implemented 2005 for Scotland and 2007 for Wales) you can search by postcode on the Ordnance Survey Election Maps web site at www.election-maps.co.uk/. Enter the full postcode (for example, SO16 4GU) with or without a space and hit 'Go'. The system will then return a list of the constituencies containing the selected postcode, including the Parliamentary constituency. If you know an address but not the postcode, consult the Royal Mail Post Code Finder at <http://postcode.royalmail.com/>. A similar facility is available on the home page of the Parliament web site at www.parliament.uk. Entering a postcode in the search box under "Find Your MP" will produce both the name of the sitting MP and the constituency.

Craig's Boundaries of parliamentary constituencies 1885-1972 contains descriptions of constituencies in terms of contemporary local authority areas and maps for each revision for the period covered. The maps are small-scale and outline only, bordering on diagrams, but they are often sufficient alone or together with the constituency descriptions to identify what is wanted. Similar information for the 1983 revision can be found in Crewe and Fox's British parliamentary constituencies and for the 1995 revision in Rallings and Thrasher's Media guide to the new parliamentary constituencies. Both revisions are covered in different editions of Waller's Almanac of British politics, the 5th-8th editions for the 1995 revision and earlier ones for the 1983 revisions. For the 2010 revision (implemented 2007 in Wales and 2005 in Scotland) use Dod's New constituency guide. 4th ed.

For inner London (the old LCC area), the simplest way to establish the constituency required between 1885 and 1954 is to consult one of the LCC's Lists of streets and places, the 1900 or 1912 edition for constituencies 1885-1915, the 1929 edition for 1918-48 and the 1955 edition for the period 1949-54. In each edition there is a column for parliamentary constituencies and this information is given for every street. In some editions, for long streets like the Edgware Road or the Old Kent Road that ran through several constituencies, house number spans are included for each constituency.

If the parish is known or can be established for the locality sought, Youngs' Guide to local administrative units of England in two volumes (Northern and Southern) is invaluable. It contains a section of 'Parliamentary Constituencies' but it is the 'Parish' section arranged by county that should be consulted. This indicates the constituencies in which the parish was successively placed with dates and, if the parish was newly created or abolished, it will indicate the parish that formerly or subsequently contained it. If the constituency reference is to a sequence (e.g. Parl. Seq. 3) one must refer to the start of that county's parish section when the sequences, used to save space when several parishes share a common history of parliamentary representation, are given. Parishes can be identified, among other ways, through the Census Index of places.

Once the constituency or constituencies that are wanted have been established by whatever means, then the list in the main section of this work can be consulted to find out if the British Library has the registers and, if so, where they are to be found or, in practical terms, what are the relevant pressmarks. The names of the constituencies given in this list are the official names derived from the legislation establishing them, or from the registers themselves. Only three exceptions have been made, two general and one particular. Pre-1948 constituency names took the form of 'Parliamentary County (or Borough) of '. In this list, Parliamentary County has been abbreviated to PC and Parliamentary Borough to PB and inverted so that, for example, the 'Parliamentary County of Kent' becomes 'Kent PC'. Secondly, the many counties that take their names from their county towns have always been officially called 'County of [name of town]' though less formally they are better known as '[name of town]-shire', so County of Worcester is the formal name of Worcestershire and this extends to a number of counties where the shire form has evolved somewhat (County of Chester/ Cheshire; County of Lancaster/Lancashire or County of Southampton/Hampshire). In all these cases, according to the previous convention, these parliamentary counties should be listed as ' [name of town] PC' but as the towns concerned would usually have been a parliamentary borough as well, this would have been too confusing (Lancaster PC/Lancaster PB) and so the -shire form of the county name has been preferred (Lancashire PC not Lancaster PC). The particular exception concerns Lincolnshire (or County of Lincoln) for the period 1918 to 1948. The ancient threefold division of the county was as Parts of Lindsey, Parts of Holland and Parts of Kesteven. These divisions were made separate administrative counties in 1889 and separate parliamentary counties in 1918, and their formal names were 'The Administrative [or Parliamentary] County of the Parts of Lindsey [or Holland, or Kesteven]'. It seems perverse to enter these counties in the list under 'P' for 'Parts of Lindsey PC', etc., and to invert the names as 'Lindsey, Parts of, PC' seems hardly better. Unlike Yorkshire's three Ridings, Lincolnshire's Parts are not well known, and so they are entered as 'Lincolnshire, Parts of Lindsey PC' etc., even though Lincolnshire does not officially appear in their names.

In these brief notes, it is not possible to cover all eventualities or to explain all the pitfalls for enquirers. Readers using the Library's Social Sciences Reading Room having difficulty in identifying the constituency needed or the Library's holdings of the relevant registers, should ask for help at the Social Sciences Enquiry Desk. Staff there can assist readers in their enquiries and may be able to suggest alternative sources for registers not held by the Library or, perhaps, suggest other routes for the enquiry if electoral registers prove inappropriate. Similar advice may be available to telephone enquirers and anyone contemplating visiting the Library for the first time should phone in advance.

Print and microfilm versions of registers are ordered online through the automated book request system (ABRS). Please follow the instructions in our Guide at <http://bl.uk/catalogues/order/registers.html>. At present all print registers up to and including 2001 are held off site in Yorkshire. You need to allow at least 48 hours for delivery. Print registers from 1998 to the present are held on site at St Pancras and are normally delivered in 70 minutes. Please note that only one year can be ordered per ABRS request, even if the years wanted are consecutive.

Registers with a microfilm shelfmark, e.g. Bath – SPR.Mic.P.44/BL.B.13 are held on-site at St Pancras and can also be delivered in 70 minutes.

We strongly suggest that if you are unfamiliar with the ordering process or the registers you contact a member of the Social Sciences Reference Team. This can be done by filling in an online form that will be sent to the Social Sciences Reference Services (at <http://www.bl.uk/reshelp/inrrooms/stp/refteam/refteam/refcontacts.html>) or by e-mailing social-sciences@bl.uk. Alternatively you can telephone the Reference Team between 09:30 and 17:00 Monday to Friday on 0207 412 7894. As has been explained above, the difficulties involved in establishing the name of a constituency make ordering particularly problematical. Moreover, due to repeated stock moves the list of electoral registers held by the British Library may no longer be completely accurate.

Examples of different searches

There are various ways of identifying constituencies according to the type of information held: The following examples show some of the range of possibilities. The reference works mentioned are all available on the open shelves of the Official Publications Reading Room, mostly on the 'ERR' shelves.

1. Morley Avenue, Wood Green, N22 6NG for the current year. Go to the OS Election Maps web site at <http://www.election-maps.co.uk/> and choose postcode search. Enter the postcode in the search box with or without gaps and press "go". The system will tell you that the address is in the HORNSEY AND WOOD GREEN BC. This web site also has an area search facility, but this can be temperamental.
2. Cromwell Place, Highgate, London, N .6. for 1997. Find Cromwell Place on the Master atlas of Greater London p. 62 or online on www.streetmap.co.uk. It forms a cul-de-sac in the angle between Hornsey Lane and Highgate High Street. Compare it with the 1995 Boundary Commission map (England Vol. 3, Map 14). The constituency boundaries follow the borough boundaries shown on the Master atlas and on Streetmap, so Cromwell Place (in Haringay), though close to two other constituencies, is in HORNSEY AND WOOD GREEN BC (N.B. not Hampstead and Highgate, as its address might suggest). Check the list of constituencies that follow; the pressmark is BL.H. 162.
3. Main Road, Friday Bridge, near Wisbech for 1981-85. Find Friday Bridge on www.streetmap.co.uk or on the map in Bartholomew gazetteer of Britain. It is on map p.38; note the location of the county boundary nearby - Friday Bridge is in Cambridgeshire. Compare it with the 1983 Boundary Commission map (map 26). It is in NORTH EAST CAMBRIDGESHIRE CC. The overlay (map 26A) gives the previous constituency (1971-83), almost unchanged but named ISLE OF ELY Cc. The pressmark for the former from 1984 is BL.N.75 and for the latter up to 1983 is BL.I.10.

4. Bazon Street, Waterloo, London, S.E.1 for 1933. Consult the LCC's Names of streets and places, 1929 ed., p.40. Bazon Street was in LAMBETH, NORTH DIVISION (1918-48). (N.B. Bazon Street does not appear on a modern London street atlas as it disappeared in the South Bank redevelopment but it does appear in Bain's Map directory of London, 3rd ed., 1933, which also has a map of constituencies - particularly useful for outer London). Some registers for Lambeth North are held but there is a gap from 1902 to 1936. The London Metropolitan Archives should have the register required.
5. Lomas Lane, Hawkhurst, Kent for 1943. An Act of Parliament suspended the compilation of registers in 1939 and none exists for 1940 to 1944. There is no point in identifying the constituency for the period but if an earlier or later register were wanted, the procedure would be as set out in the next example (5).
6. Brighton Road, Lancing, Sussex for 1947. Check 'Lancing' in Youngs' Guide to local administrative units of England in the list of Sussex parishes (V 01.1, p.515) where the constituency is given as 'seq.19'; on p.498, this converts to WEST SUSSEX WORTHING DIVISION (for 1945-48 only - it was one of the areas twice revised in the 1940s). The Library has registers for the Worthing Division for 1947 and 1948 and the pressmark is BL.S.153.
7. Lillieshall Street, Helmsdale, Sutherland for 1868-75. The period before 1885 is difficult. In this case, there was no 1868 Boundary report for Scotland and the Reform Act concerned only mentions actual changes. As there were none for this area, you have to go back to the 1832 Act - the Representation of the people (Scotland) Act 1832 (2&3 Gu1.4, cap.65). Schedule A shows that Sutherland as a whole returned one MP and, unless Helmsdale was a Parliamentary Burgh, the county is the constituency needed. Most Scottish Burghs, like Welsh Boroughs, were grouped into 'Districts' for purposes of representation; these are listed in schedule E, and Helmsdale is not among them (see Public general Acts 1832, pp.643-44, BS.Ref.3). The registers required are held (BL.S.C.2). The same information could be derived from Craig's British Parliamentary election results, 1832-1885 at OPL 329.02342, one of a series which list results by constituencies and, for Scottish Districts of Burghs, list the Burghs included but do not otherwise define constituencies.
8. Alma Street, Beaumaris for 'early twentieth century'. Beaumaris is on the Isle of Anglesey (Ynys Mon) and does not need to be more precisely located. Craig's Boundaries of parliamentary constituencies, 1885-1972 lists the 1885-1918 constituencies in an appendix without description. But Anglesey is stated to be an undivided county containing no Boroughs (p.163) and the map (p.198) indicates the same. ANGLESEY is, therefore, the constituency wanted but only two odd registers are recorded before 1937 (BL.W.A. 1). If 1897 is too early, there are no certain alternatives but it is worth approaching the local County Record Office (Llangefni Area Record Office, Gwynedd Archives Service) who may have the registers or know of a local source. The possibility of there being no surviving registers must be accepted.

APPENDICES

Pre-1832 constituencies

No constituencies had parliamentary electoral registers before 1832 and the following list is included for the sake of completeness only. It includes:

- a) English parliamentary boroughs of mediaeval or later date that failed to sustain that status up to 1832 (distinguished in this list by an asterisk *), the last, Grampound, disfranchised in 1821;
- b) English parliamentary boroughs disfranchised in 1832;
- c) English parliamentary counties divided in 1832 (and therefore no longer forming single constituencies);
- d) Scottish counties conjoined in 1832 (and therefore no longer forming constituencies on their own); and
- e) certain Scottish districts of burghs.

No individual Scottish burgh contributing to a district was disfranchised but several of the largest became parliamentary burghs in their own right necessitating the reorganisation and renaming of the districts of which they were formerly head-burghs; the former districts are listed here. No Welsh county, borough or district of boroughs was abolished in 1832 (two new boroughs were created and some counties got a second MP). The list includes four boroughs that sent MPs only to Commonwealth parliaments, shown in italics. Some of the parliamentary boroughs in this list were subsequently revived (e.g. Dudley) and others subsequently gave their name to county seats (e.g. Torrington) and these will also be found in the main list. The following has been compiled from secondary sources and makes no claim to be definitive.

Pre-partition Irish registers

Ireland returned 100 MPs to Westminster from 1801 under the Act of Union and that was increased to 105 in 1832. In that year, in common with the rest of the United Kingdom, electoral registers were introduced and, in the ninety years following until partition, 7,410 were issued.

The British Library's holdings are insignificant – only 27, barely a third of one per cent of the total, and all of them just for a single year – and it would seem pointless to bulk out the main inventory with unheld Irish registers. A full list of Irish constituencies for the period can be found in Brian M. Walker's Parliamentary election results in Ireland, 1801-1922 (Dublin: Royal Irish Academy, 1978). The few registers held by the British Library are listed below. All have been filmed and the pressmarks given are those for the microfilm copies.

Irish, Manx and Channel Island registers

In addition to the United Kingdom, there are four other jurisdictions in the British Isles – the Isle of Man, the bailiwicks of Jersey and Guernsey in the Channel Islands, the last including the dependencies of Alderney and Sark, and since 1922 the Republic of Ireland (the Irish Free State until 1937). Each have registers for the constituencies of their respective legislatures – the Dáil Éireann in Ireland, the House of Keys in the Isle of Man and the States in Jersey and Guernsey. The British Library's holdings of these registers are meagre and none is current except for a few parishes in Jersey. For Ireland, the Library holds the registers for the constituencies comprising the City and the County of Dublin for a single year only and no others; for the Isle of Man, a complete set of registers for two odd years only; for Jersey, some four dozen miscellaneous registers for ten parishes over nearly 20 years; and for Guernsey, nothing at all. The Dublin registers have been filmed. The list of registers held is as follows.

University parliamentary registers

Universities were represented in the United Kingdom Parliament until 1950. The two ancient universities of England, Oxford and Cambridge, each sent two MPs to Westminster from the early seventeenth century when on acceding to the English throne James VI of Scotland decided that the practice of the Scottish Parliament, – which granted seats to Scotland's five ancient universities St Andrews, Glasgow, King's College Aberdeen, Marischal College Aberdeen and Edinburgh, should be followed in England. In 1603 the universities of Oxford and Cambridge were enfranchised by Royal Charter. However the Scottish universities lost their representation after the Union and this was not reinstated until 1868.

Dublin University (more commonly known as Trinity College, Dublin) was represented in the Irish Parliament and, following the Union with Ireland Act, it sent one MP to Westminster, increased to two in 1832. In 1867 London University was awarded a seat and the following year the four Scottish universities were awarded two seats – Aberdeen and Glasgow electing one MP and St. Andrews and Edinburgh the other.

The 1885 Reform Act left university representation unchanged, but the 1918 Act extended it to all the then existing universities. In England, the remaining universities (Birmingham, Bristol, Durham, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester and Sheffield) combined as 'English Universities' to elect two MPs and, in Wales, the University of Wales elected one MP. The four Scottish universities were already represented but now, instead of being paired to elect an MP each, they were grouped together as 'Scottish Universities' to elect three MPs between them. In Ireland, the National University of Ireland and Queen's University, Belfast were both awarded a seat. After this the only changes till abolition were that Dublin University and the National University of Ireland ceased in 1922 to send MPs to Westminster and, in 1928, Reading University, newly raised to that status, was added to the English Universities constituency.

The university franchise was extended to all graduates of the universities concerned and it would have been possible to use alumni registers in each university to establish the electorate there. Nevertheless, parliamentary registers do exist, at least in some instances, and the British Library has such registers for three of the universities as follows:-

Cambridge University	Parliamentary register, 1918-39 & 1945-47	P.P. 2506.ddd

Non-parliamentary registers

The British Library has a considerable number of non-parliamentary registers which are listed below. They are a very miscellaneous collection. Most are local government registers. In English and Welsh boroughs these are generally called burgess rolls or burgess lists (the latter may be draft registers), or citizens' rolls in cities, and occasionally freemen's lists. Ward lists are the same arranged by wards. In Scottish burghs they are generally called municipal registers or registers of town council electors. Some specialised registers exist, such as registers of liverymen in London and pasture rolls in Grimsby, and some sectional registers – in one instance a list of claimants for entry on the burgess roll and lists of persons objected to, and in another instance a municipal franchise list of females (women, or some of them, had the municipal vote for nearly half a century before the parliamentary vote). Also sectional in character are the ratepayers' registers, business premises registers and occupiers' lists but these, though listed here, are strictly sections of the parliamentary register. At parish level there are parochial registers (not to be confused with electoral rolls for parochial church councils in the Church of England), and at county level there were registers of county council electors from 1889 to 1915; one register is simply called a local government register.

All of these are electoral registers but there are others. There are lists of jurors, chiefly for Northern Ireland, and there are a considerable quantity of Scottish valuation rolls. These are similar in character to the (unpublished) rate books in England, as are the listes du rât or listes des contribuables au rât in Jersey. With such variety, it is not practical to have a systematic arrangement of the registers held and the following list is a single alphabetical sequence in order of the name of the area covered, followed by a description of the register (not a proper title) with dates of registers held and the shelfmarks.

Poll books

The following is a checklist of poll books held by the British Library. Unlike electoral registers, poll books have never formed a discrete collection and it has not generally proved feasible to check copies at the shelf. Information has been derived principally from the Library's General catalogue of printed books in both its printed and online form with published and unpublished checklists checked against this. Only when there was a suspicion of error (as when a poll book is allegedly dated for a year in which there was no election) or when the catalogue entry is deficient (as when the entry for a made-up volume of poll books does not identify the ones included), were the volumes checked to resolve the problems.

Even though this list is believed to be the fullest, published or unpublished, of the Library's holding (and almost unique in giving pressmarks), there may well be items overlooked. In addition to poll books in the Library's collection of printed books, those published in newspapers and held in the Library's Newspaper Collection are included here, as are a few manuscript poll books in the Department of Manuscripts. The latter have their manuscript number in the Add.Mss. (Additional manuscripts) series in lieu of pressmarks and the former are located just as 'Newsroom'. In such cases, enquirers will have to consult Sims' Handlist of British parliamentary poll books for details of the newspaper containing the poll. Likewise where, as in a surprising number of cases, there is more than one edition of a poll, the Library's catalogue must be consulted to determine which are held.

The following conventions have been used in this list. As in Sims and in Gibson and Rogers' Poll books 1696-1872, an asterisk (*) indicates a by-election. (NP) indicates a non-parliamentary election – an election for an office or offices in the county, borough or university concerned rather than for members to sit in parliament. Dates not thus qualified are for parliamentary general elections. (NS) after a date (for 'new style') are for elections up to 1752 that fell between 1 January and 24 March and which would have been reckoned and were dated to the previous year (the official 'new year' being then 25 March – Lady Day). Thus the first election of George I's reign was in February 1715 but was dated '1714' at the time and is recorded as '1715 (NS)' here. (Incomplete) after a shelfmark indicates that the Library's copy is defective and recorded as such in the Library's catalogue; other defective copies may not be so noted and some poll books were published incomplete.

Legislation

A small selection of some of the varied and numerous legislation surrounding electoral registration is given here:

Note for instance that legislation creating seats ad hoc between major redistributions is ignored, apart from that of 1945, as are the numerous orders effecting minor boundary adjustments.

In date order

Representation of the people act 1832 (2&3 Gul.4 cap.45)

Parliamentary boundaries act 1832 (2&3 Gul.4 cap.64)

Representation of the people (Scotland) act 1832 (2&3 Gul.4 cap.65)

Representation of the people act 1867 (30&31 Vic.cap.102)

Representation of the people (Scotland) act 1868. (31&32 Vic. cap.48)

Representation of the people act 1884. (48&49 Vic. cap.3)

Redistribution of seats act 1885. (48&49 Vic. cap.23)

Representation of the people act 1918. (7&8 Geo.5 cap.64) (gave most women over the age of 30 the vote and created universal male suffrage. Absent voting for some voters allowed and general elections held on a single day).

Representation of the people act 1920 (10&11 Geo.5 cap.15)

Representation of the people (no. 2) act 1920 (10&11 Geo.5 cap.35)

Government of Ireland act 1920 (10&11 Geo.5 cap.67), Sect.19 (a) & Schedule 5 Pt II.

Representation of the people (Equal Franchise) act 1928 (18&19 Geo. 5 c.12) (gave equal universal adult suffrage for those 21 years and over).
